AN

ELIZABETHAN GUILD

OF THE

CITY OF EXETER,

AN ACCOUNT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF

THE SOCIETY OF MERCHANT ADVENTURERS,

DURING THE LATTER HALF OF THE 16TH CENTURY,

BY

WILLIAM COTTON, F.S.A.,

MEMBER OF THE ROYAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

TO THE

RIGHT WORSHIPFUL THE MAYOR OF EXETER,

CHARLES JOHN FOLLETT, ESQUIRE, B.C.L.,

THIS WORK

IS, BY PERMISSION, DEDICATED.

MDCCCLXXIII.
PREFACE.

The published histories of Exeter contain but one short paragraph relating to the most important of the Old City Guilds: it runs thus:—"1556 the Merchant Adventurers of this City trading to France and beyond the seas were incorporated by the Queen's Charter." The Queen here referred to is, of course, Mary, but it is doubtful if this Charter conveyed any substantial privilege or had any effect in stimulating commercial adventure.

The real foundation of the Guild dates undoubtedly from the original Charter granted by Queen Elizabeth, in which there is no reference whatever to a previous Charter. Certain services rendered to the Royal cause, in troublous times, is the only consideration expressed in the deed, for the privileges granted.

The absence of any allusion to this Guild by local historians is easily accounted for. John Hoker, the historian of the time, was a member of the Society, and was bound by his oath not to reveal its affairs, and when Isacke, his successor, wrote, the Society had been dissolved and left no trace, beyond a few scattered references to be found amongst the Municipal Archives. It is not until our own day that the proceedings of these Merchant Adventurers have been disclosed, and perhaps a better time could not have been selected than the present, with its gigantic commerce and daring speculation, to look back upon the time when the English trader first ventured to freight his own ships, and, under State encouragement, developed into the Merchant.

By the courtesy of the Master and Wardens of the Ancient Society of Weavers, Fullers and Shearmen, I have had placed at my disposal the minutes of the proceedings of the "Society of Merchant Adventurers trading beyond the Seas." These minutes are a record of transactions extending from the foundation of the Society to the end of the reign of Elizabeth; the papers were discovered amongst the archives of the Weavers' Society.

The commercial history of this period, generally speaking, yet remains to be written, and the interesting time when good Queen Bess was on the throne is treated of, by local historians, in a very scanty and summary manner. I have therefore thought it well to transcribe from these records, 'verbatim et literatim,' what appeared to me worthy of preservation, and the result is now presented to the reader with a commentary, (originally in the form of a Lecture delivered to the Members of the Exeter Literary Society) the shortcomings and defects in which will, I trust, be excused and lost sight of in the interest which should surround these episodes of a byegone age.

It will be seen that three hundred years ago Exeter occupied no mean position in the commercial world, and that her Merchants were men of mark. Their enterprize and intelligence is conspicuous, and not the least in the great work, for those days of the Canal, which, commenced in 1563, eventually opened a way for the shipping from the sea to Exeter Quay.

Apart from the convenience and saving of expense effected by thus being able to bring goods by water up to the walls of the City, there was the advantage of a snug and safe refuge, far from the estuary and under cover of the guns of the battery; no mean consideration when the free rover would cut out a ship from Dartmouth Harbour, and carry off his prize.

The term "Adventurer" applied perhaps more to the prospect of the perils of the sea, and the contingency of loss by rovers and pirates, than to hazardous speculation in merchandize. We may fairly conclude that the judgment and caution of our Merchants prevented their being carried away with the adventurous enthusiasm of the times, and that their desire was to establish the "trade of merchandize" on a solid foundation. This is apparent in the anxiety to render those, who would at some time claim the right of admission to the Guild, worthy of membership. A long term of servitude was considered necessary for the apprentice, ere he could be trusted to set up for himself, and his interests and proper instruction had careful attention; indeed it was not an unusual thing to send an apprentice to France, for a time, in order to acquire the language; and this at the expense of the master to whom he was bound.

Apart from the commercial phase, we have revealed to us, in these minutes, glimpses of the social life of the period, and there is frequent reference to names which are still associated with the City: Above all, we make some acquaintance with such historic characters as Raleigh, Drake, Davis, and the Gilberts.

The Guild, probably, attained its greatest eminence in the next reign, and collapsed during the Parliamentary Wars. On the stone tablet in Bartholomew Yard, recording the consecration of the burial-ground in 1637, the Arms of the Merchant Adventurers and of Bishop Hall, who performed the ceremony, are placed one on either side of the Arms of the City.
Three hundred years after his death is somewhat late in the day to pay a tribute to the memory of the Clerk to the Guild John Ffelde; but I cannot help expressing admiration at the exquisite care with which the first half of this Minute Book was kept. The specimens of caligraphy are simply perfect, and render the work of transcription comparatively an easy task.

With respect to the Illustrations, I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to give examples of the houses, which, it may reasonably be assumed, existed at the time. Nos. 78 and 79 Fore Street, Nos. 19 and 20 North Street, No. 46 High Street, and the corner of North Street with the figure of St. Peter, are still remaining, in good preservation; the engravings are from original drawings by Mr. Geo. Townsend, as are also the old houses in Frog Street, Westgate Street, and Red Lion Court, (since demolished), and the chimney-piece in Mallock's house. The representations of the Butchers' Row and the ancient Gates are from existing works. Northgate was removed in 1769, Eastgate in 1784, Westgate in 1815, Southgate in 1819, Watergate in 1615, and Broadgate in 1823. The last resident in the latter was the scavenger of the Close.

The Portraits were prepared expressly for this work. The first process—photographing from the faded oil-paintings—was one of considerable difficulty, but it was successfully accomplished, and the lithographs therefrom present a close resemblance to the originals. I am indebted to the courtesy of the Mayor (to whom this volume is dedicated) for permission to reproduce all of these with the exception of Hugh Crossing, and for that to the kindness of the Rev. H. Newport, Head Master of the Grammar School.
The representation of Exeter Quay in the 16th century is not entirely an ideal picture. The old maps in the City Muniment Room enable us to draw the general features with accuracy, and the details are easily filled in from descriptive and other sources. With a desire to be strictly accurate I must express a doubt if there was an archway, like that depicted, in the Battery Tower; notwithstanding, I have allowed the statement to remain in the text until too late for revision. In the earliest known map of the City no opening is apparent, but in Speed's later map there are indications either of traffic through the tower to the mill-levat, or, what is more probable, they represent the waste water running from the Conduit which is wanting in the old map. It is not unlikely that the name "Battery-steps" is derived from some passage leading from the higher to the lower level, through the tower.

I am indebted to Moore's History of Devonshire for much information of a biographical character; and have to express my acknowledgments to many kind friends for their aid and encouragement.

THE CHARTER GRANTED TO THE MERCHANT ADVENTURERS OF THE CITY OF EXETER BY QUEEN ELIZABETH.

ELIZABETH by the grace of God Queene of Englande, ffrance, and Irlande, defender of the faith, etc. To all to whome this present wrytinge shall come greetinge, Knowe ye that wee, in consideracion of the good trewe and faithfull obedyence and servise, done by the maio' and citizens of our Citie of Excester, aswell in the tyme of o' moste welbeloved grandfather Kinge Henry the Seventh: as nowe of late, in the tyme of oure wel-beloved brother Kinge Edwarde the Syxt, ageinst dyverse treasones and rebellions being moved and sturred in that dayes.
And also for the speciall favoure and love which wee have and doó beere to ooure welbeloved and faithfull subjectes, nowe citizens of ooure saide Citie of Excester: Desiring the good contynuance and happie succession and increase of the same.
And also for taking awaie, abolisshinge, and amovinge, of many and sundrie obsurdities and inconveniences which of late within the saide Citie hath cropen in and grown by reason of the excessive number of artificers and other inexpert ignorante and unworthie men which doo take upon them to use the arte scyence and mysterie of merchandise: and trafique of merchant wares to the greate detriment of the commonwealth of this oure realme of Englane. And also for dyverse other good consideracions especiallie moving us thereunto. Of oure especiall grace, and of oure certain knowledge and meere mocion: wee will graunte and ordeyne for us oure heires and successors; and by thes presentes we geve especiall lycence, unto our welbeloved Robert Mydwynter, John Buller, William Hurste, John Blackall the elder, John Mydwynter, William Bucknam, Morrys Levermore, Walter Staplehill, John Peter thelder, John Wolcote, John Blackall, Richard Prestwood, Harry Maunder, Peter Lake, Thomas Lambert, Thomas Richardson, Thomas Prestwood, Symon Knyght, Eustace Olyver, William Chapell, Gilbert Saywell, Nicholas Martyn, John Vowels als Hoker, William Tryvet, Mychael Germyn, Edmonde Whetcombe, Thomas Marshall, Edwarde Lymet, William Waye, John Barstable, Hubert Colwyll, Phillipp Yarde, Richard Zelwod, Richard Haselwodd, William Seldon, Thomas Spycer, Andrewe Gere, Robert Hunte, John Lawgher, Richard Mawdyt, Richard Hockley, Harry Ellacote, Richarde Gybbe, Harry Robertes, William Hunte, John Hyll, John Budley, John Hychens, and John Hewet: Nowe beinge marchauntes adventurers of o" saide Citie of Excester, and unto their successors marchauntes adventurers of o" saide Citie for ever, and to others which are or shalbe of their Societie, one Governor and fower Consulls, which may the better governe and rule the state of all things belonging to the said marchantes. The which Governo' Consulls and whole Societie of Marchantes Adventurers of the saide Citie by the name of a Governo' Consulls and Societie of Marchantes Adventurers of the Citie of Excester, trasfiquing the realme of ffraunce and dominions of the ffrenche kinge: That they be and shalbe one bodye corporate and politque and one whole companye in deede, worde, and name, and them and their successors wee ordeyne, estabylshe, create; erect, incorporate, and unite together, by the same name, one bodye corporate and politque in deede, worde, and name, by thes presentes for ever to endure, and to have perpetuall succession. And further that oure entencion may take moore worthie effect towards the benefyt of the saide marchantes, wee will and by thes presentes graunte that the forenamed and our welbeloved John Peter thelder, be and shalbe the fyrst newe Governo', and the foresaid and our welbeloved William Hurste, John Mydwynter, Gilbert Saywell, and Symon Knyght, be and shall be the firste newe Consulls of the companye of the foresaid marchants. And furthermore we will, and by thes presentes graunte for us, or heires, and successors, to the saide Governo' Consulls and Societie, and to their successors for ever. That they and their successors, by the foresaide name of a Governo' Consuls and Societie of Merchants Adventurers of the Citie of Exon traffi-quinge the realme of Ffraunce and dominions of the Ffrenche Kinges, be hable and expert in the lawe, to searche out, to perceave, to receave, to have and to holde to theim and to their successors in fée and perpetuitie, or by any other waies, to the better supportinge of the burdens of the forsaiide marchantes daylie growing and happening ; as well ofoure heires or successors, as of any other parson or parsons whatsoever (all kynde of goodes, cattalles, lordshippes, manors, mesuages, landes, tenements, advowsions, and other proffyetes and hereditaments), that will sell, geve, graunte, yealde, alienate, enfeoffe, or confirme the same, so that it do not excede, in the whole, above the yerely valewe of one hundred marks besides all charges and reprises, by the lycence of the highe lorde of the same. The statute of settynge of landes and tenementes to mortmayne or any other Statute Act, ordynance, proviso, proclamacion, or restraynt to the contrary before this tyme set forth, ordeyned, or provided, in any wise notwithstandinge.

AND that the saide Goevrnor, Consulls, and Societie, by the saide name, may sue and be sued, defende and be defended answer and be answered, in all and singler actions, quarrells, sutes, and demandes whatsoever, as well reall and parsonall and myxt, or of what kynde or nature so ever they be, and before whatsoever of Justice or Judge, or before every oure Justices or Judges, or any other oure Officers or Mynisters of us, or heires and successors, or any other whatsoever within this oure Realme of Englande, or Marcheses of the same: or in whatsoever Courte and other place, and in whatsoever Courtes and other places of us ovre heires and successors, or of any other within oure Realme of Englande or Marcheses of the same. And that they have one common seale to serve in their busyns for ever in tyme to come.

And farther we will and by theses presentes, for us, our heires, and successors, Doo geve and grannte lycence to the Governo’, Consulls, and Societie, and to their saide successors, that they or the greater parte of the same marchantes maye yerelie and successivelie chuse and mak in every the syxt daye of August, one Governo’ and fower Consulls, which shall remayne in their saide offices the space of one whole yeare: The which Governo’ and Consulls (a Corporall othe beinge first ministred) the common affaires of the saide societie may and shall support, and have care of and of the same societie and misterie. As also of all and singular parsons whatsoever of the saide Citie of Excester, usinge the misterey of marchandise and mereres, and those that shall serve theim their servantes, apprentices, and factors, and also the marchandise, marchant, wares, merceries, and every kynde of the same to cause to be oversene, rewled, governed, and corrected, from tyme to tyme as it shall seeme to theim most expedient, accordinge to the lawes and statutes among theim made in this behalfe. And that they (as often tymes as to theim shall seeme expedient, for suche entent and purpose) may of theim selves, make lawfull and honest assembles in all suche kynde of places and haules, as by theim shalbe erected or appointed. And that among themselves, they may make, setfurth, and ordeyne, as many and singler reasonable and holsome statutes, lawes, and ordynaunces, for the good rewle and governaunce of all their goodes, cattalls, landes, tenementes, and hereditamentes, as of the Governo', Consulls, and Societie, and of all and singular parsons of the same societie, not only of occupiers but also of sarvauntes, and suche as doo serve in the same mystery; as also for the correction and ponyshement of the faulctes in the same whatsoever, as it shall seeme from tyme to tyme to theim best expedient. And also that the saide statutes, lawes, and ordynaunces, when and as often as they byst shall abolyshe, make voyde, frustrate, alter, and channge, and other newe statutes at their pleasure maye ordeyne, set, observe, and commaunde from tyme to tyme accordinge to their good discrecions as it shall best please theim. Soo that the saide statutes lawes and ordynaunces, or any parte or partes thereof be not repugnant or contrary to the customable lawes statutes and ordynaunces of oure Realme of England, or oure saide Citie of Excester, the which wee commande, and will to be observed inviolateliex.

And also we have graunted to the Governo' and his saide Consulls and Companye, and to their saide successors, that when and as often as it doeth happen, any or one of theim, the saide Governo' and Consulls, after being chosen into any of the offices aforesaide to dye before the determinacion of one whole yeare next and imediatelie following the daye of suche election, or before the prefixt ende of his continuacion in the saide office, or wyllinglie doo goo awaye from his office by any cause or meanes whatsoever, soo that he is not able nor cannot observe, fulfill, and execute his office and place accordinglie, Or ells yf hec or they doo refuse or neclect to execute suche an office: That then the saide Governors, Consulls, and Societie, or the greater parte of theim may lawfullie and frelic be hable, and shall chewse and appoynte some other honest man or men of the foresaide companye, in the place of hym or theim so dyeing, de-partinge, refusinge, or neclectinge, for the residue of the yeare folowinge and contynewing: and that from tyme to tyme as often as it shall soo happen. AND FARTHER of our ample grace, and for the consideracions aforesaide, as also for the greater quietnes and welth of the saide Merchantes wee will and by thes presentes doo ordeyne and establishe and also forbyd, that none of the citizens or inhabitance of oure saide cytie of Excester, nether of the Countie of the saide Citie, of what estate, degree, or condition soever hee bee, doo from hensforth presume or dare to transporte delyver, shipp, or convey any kynde of marchandies, marchantwares, or merceres to the saide Realme of ffraunce or any other the Kinge of ffraunce, his dominions out of this oure realme, nor to bringe in or convey, or cause to be brought in or conveyed, by any meanes, any kinde of marchant wares, merceres, or marchandise, from the saide realme of ffraunce, or the frenche kynges dominions into this our realme (the marchanntes aforesaide onlie excepted) upon payne of a greveous fyne, or other kinde of punyshement upon theim reasonable to be set or done, except he be first free of the saide company accordinge to the determinacion in that behalf to be ordeyned.

AND farther, of oure more abundant grace, wee ordeyne, will, graunte, and by thes presentes doo firmelie adioyne and commaunde That all and singler artificers of our said Citie, which will exercise, doo, and frequent the mysterie and arte of mer-

John Hoker,
AD 1601 æt. 76.
"Post mortem vita"
An Elizabethan Guild of the City of Exeter.

In the year 1549 this fair City of Exeter endured for a whole summer month the horrors of a siege. Beset by rebel fanatics, whose minds were affected, Hoker says, owing "to the sun being in Cancer and the midsummer moon at full," and who numbered partisans and sympathizers within the gates superior to the loyal and well affected, the Mayor and principal citizens had enough to do to hold their own, and prevent the enemy from taking possession of the City.

Lord Russell who had been sent down by the king to suppress the rebellion was at this time at Honiton, "in an agony and of a heavy cheer," prevented from moving for want of men and money. It chanced then that three Merchants of Exeter—John Bodlie, Thomas Prestwood, and John Periam—"understanding of his Lordship's heaviness and grief, did procure such a mass of money" as provided all that was necessary to enable him to march forward, disperse the enemy, and raise the siege: which was accomplished on the 6th August in the same year.

This act on the part of the three Merchants, together with the steadfast loyalty of their brethren within the walls of the City, was not forgotten (direct reference to it being made in the Charter) ten years later, when Elizabeth, who had ascended the throne amid the hopes and joys of the whole nation, granted the Merchants of Exeter that Charter of privileges on which was founded the important Guild of the Merchant Adventurers of the City of Exeter.

The mention of Elizabethan days naturally conjures up names which can never be separated from the history of our country
With these we shall have but little to do, although West country-men may well be proud of them and should never be weary of the oft-told tale of glory and adventure in which they occupy so conspicuous a position. But there are other names, lost sight of and eclipsed by the brilliance of those surrounded by the strong light of romantic adventure and glorious achievement, which deserve a place in history, at all events, in local history, for they are inseparably connected with the dawn of that industry, that maritime commerce, and that legitimate enterprize which constitute the real greatness of this country.

The policy of Elizabeth early showed itself in an earnest desire to encourage and develop mercantile interests, and although it has been somewhat generally accepted as historical fact that she stimulated the Merchants, by concessions and favors, to amass wealth in order that she might fleece them for the benefit of her favorites, yet, notwithstanding that there may be some foundation for the charge, it may perhaps also be assumed that, considering the great advantages they enjoyed, the Merchants were willing victims and complained very much less than their sympathizers of the present day.

The Charter for the incorporation of the Merchant Adventurers of the City of Exeter trading to France and beyond the seas was granted by Queen Elizabeth within a few months of her accession to the Throne. It is a lengthy document and will be found in extenso at the commencement of the volume.

It may be easily imagined, considering the powers and privileges granted, that as the Company grew in strength and influence, a kind of "Imperium in Imperio" would be established, and that the laws of the Guild would become the laws of the City. Indications of this kind show themselves, and in more than one instance the Mayor of the City, although the greatest man in it, found that the Governor of the Company was a greater.

The Merchants were not allowed to take up their privileges without a struggle. No sooner was the character of the Charter known than the other City Companies, headed by the Tailors, combined to prosecute suits in order to upset it.¹

Nearly two years of confusion and disturbance ensued which well nigh drove the Citizens to distraction, until the cause of the Merchants, as might have been expected, with the royal determination to uphold it, triumphed. John Hoker, the historian, one of the earliest members of the Guild, acted on the part of the Merchants, and when the settlement was completed unburdened his mind in a lengthy oration to the populace explaining the whole question, which is preserved in his own handwriting in the City Muniment room.

The difficulties which delayed the signing of the Charter having been removed, it was on the 17th June, 1560, as recorded at the foot of the document, “Done by the Queene herself and of the date as aforesaide by authoritie of Parliament.”

In the beginning of the same year, seeing an end to their troubles and virtually assured of their privileges, the Merchants assembled and proceeded to establish their Company on a formal basis. John Peter found himself in the Governor’s chair, and the names of other officials are duly recorded, including that of Mr. John Buller, Mayor, who was present ex officio. The only business before them is the application of three persons for admission to the freedom of the Company—one of them being an “apoticarie”—but they are put back for examination. On a subsequent day they are declared to be “hable ffyt and mete” and are accepted.

The first election day under the Charter was the 6th of August, 1560, and the ceremony took place in the Chapel Chamber of the Guildhall, when Mr. William Hurste was sworn in as the new Governor, and there were forty-three members present. The Courts for some years were chiefly occupied in settling controversies and disputes between the members, and in inflicting fines for breaches of the Charter. A permanent ordinance was adopted at the Courte kept xxvi January, 1561, when it was agreed that the proclamation and order made by the “Lorde Maior of London concernynge the good and honest behaviour of Citizens and Apprentises shalbe put in use by this Companye for the due observation of the same, and have chosen and elected

To make serche amonage all this Companye, and to geve reporte of their doinges at this side Shroveltide next ensuying.”

Some of the old merchants did not at once perceive the advantage of joining the Guild, nor did they think the monopoly would be insisted upon. Mr. John Periam (of whom we shall hear again) was fined twenty marks for trading to France in 1562, not being free of the Company, and neither he nor John Hackewill joined as brethren until ten years afterwards.

II. John Pyll, who also infringed the rules, was astonished to find a “ffardell of dowlas” seized as a security for any fine that might be inflicted. He ridiculed the idea of paying a fine, and “with scoffinge and tawntinge” demanded that his “ffardell” should be re-delivered together with 13s. 4d. for his charges. An order of committal to the ward-room of the Guildhall however brought him to his senses, and he thought it best to submit and become free of the Company.

Some delinquents not being provided with the necessary means for meeting the fines put in what was called a “paune.”

"XXV^th Oct. 1561.—Mr. William Bucknam brought in to this howse a pawne: A goblet sylver parcell gylte for the payment of iiiij/ xiiij/ iiiijd which he oweth to this Companye: And he upon his payment to stande to the grace and favoor of the howse."

"XXVI^th Maye 1562.—At which daye also a goblet of Mr. Bucknams which remayned in pawne for iiiij/ xiiij/ iiiijd was delivered upon hys promyse made That he at his deathe shall and will geve to this Companye the saide goblet waying aboute xiiiij oz or some other thinge worthe the same or better."

This William Bucknam or, as Izacke spells it, Buckenam was an Alderman of the City at this time, and was probably the person of the same name who was Mayor in 1541.

The policy of the Guild showed a determination to maintain the strictest discipline; fines were inflicted for non-attendance (xijd), and for being late at Court or “his slackness” (vid). Considering that the meetings were called at eight, and sometimes as early as seven o’clock in the morning, it is not to be wondered at that the fines were rather numerous. Some of the members seemed disinclined to submit to being mulcted in this manner, and only yielded on being committed to ward. Severer measures were however necessary, and we find that at the Court Appendix held 27th March, 1561, confirming fine of xijd for those absenting themselves. The resolution continues:

"And forasmoche as some of this Companye standing stubborne contemptious and flowte ar to be restrayned with a more severitie: Yt is ordered enacted and decreed That yf any parson or Parsons of this Companye being lawfullie somoned and warned to appere before the Governo’ Consultes and Companye at any Courte before theim or the more parte of theim to be holden do frowardlie or contemptiouslye departe out of the towne without lycence obteyned or being within the Citie do of a lyke frowardnes contempte or dysdeyne absent hym selfe from the saide Courte: That then evry parson so offendynge to paye for this his first contempte and mysbehaviour the some of xs And for the seconde contempte to paye xxs And for the thirde contempte xls And if he thenceforthe contynewe frowarde contemptuose or dysdeynefull to be theane dysmyssed from the saide Companye.”

"John Toker, the Bedell, presenteth the names of those who do absent themselves,” “in consederation of hys paynes” he is paid 26s 8d per annum. At the General Court of 1562 four persons were committed to ward for not paying their fines, and subsequently a “stresse was taken and brought into Courte of Richard Modetts for his absence at Courte” which was a “tapnett of fflygges.” In addition to any punishment, persons not paying their debts at the appointed time are to pay “over and besides” 2d for every shilling owing.

III. There was an imposition called “Average Money,” 1d being charged for every tun of wine and for every fardell of cloth shipped inwards or outwards of the port. The proceeds went towards the expenses of the house, but the accounts appear to have been loosely kept and cannot be depended upon. It was only when money was wanted that the Treasurer became extremely active and resorted to stern measures.
Frog Street, (West Quarter).
After some years this "average money" was farmed out and brought in at 1d £10 or £12 per annum. The rate was doubled and quadrupled before the end of the century.

So little business was doing in 1566 that the Governor and four Consuls elect were not present. The first was ordered to be fined £5, and the others 40s each if they came not to the next Court. They did.

IV. In August, 1568, the first Lottery instituted in England was supported by the members—sixty-four of whom took up ninety-six shares of 10s. each. Even "John Toker the Bedell" risked his hardly earned 10s. There is no record that any prize was drawn, but it would be a sufficient inducement for the Merchants to subscribe, in the fact that the proceeds or profits of the Lottery were to be devoted to the protection of the coast. A period of stagnation prevailed during the earlier years of the Guild, and it can be accounted for. The close of the war with France brought about a calamity worse than defeat. Our plague-stricken troops returning from Havre de Grace brought with them that terrible scourge. The soldiers dispersing to their own homes, in different parts of the country, spread the infection; and, although the fatal disease does not appear to have reached Exeter until 1569, yet all communication with London and the infected towns was cut off, and the citizens lived in an atmosphere of distrust and suspicion and fear. One may be sure that our merchants did their duty during those terrible times; and if the account of our Treasurer, John Pope, "by reason of the sycknes in Exon" is omitted from the record, it was not from any sense of its falling short in liberality.

V. There was one undertaking by the Company about this time which deserves notice on account of its historical interest. The carrying trade previous to, and in the early part of Elizabeth's reign, was almost entirely monopolised by the Appendix. Italian and Flemish shipowners. It was the Queen’s policy to encourage and develop British maritime interests; directly by concessions and proclamations, and indirectly by granting such charters as the Merchants possessed. Purchas, in his panegyric on the “Mother of England’s sea greatness,” says amongst other things in allusion to this subject, “thou freedst England from Easterlings and Lombards borrowed legs, and taught her not only to stand and goe without helpe but to become helpe to our friends &c.”

The state of affairs in Exeter, the year before Elizabeth’s accession, is disclosed in a draft answer to a requisition from the Crown, for ships doubly manned and doubly found to go to Calais.

13 Jan. 1557. Draft answer of Merchants of Exeter to Lord Winchester.

“They cannot execute his orders because no man of the County and City of Exeter hath any ship of his own, nor have any commission to take up ships mariners victuals or any other thing appertaining to ships for the wars out of their own County and City,” nor can they borrow money to do it, “bycause of very late and nowe it is yn hand that a great number of men as well within the Cetic of Exeter as yn the Countie of Devon do dis-burse to the Quene's matie by way of lone a great masse of tresure.”—(City Archives).

Less than ten years later, fortified with the encouraging influence of an enlightened and patriotic government, our Merchants ventured on an experiment, which, whilst it freed them from dependence upon foreign aid, initiated that maritime enterprise in Devonshire which, not long after, made her pre-eminent in this respect among all counties in the empire.

The following extracts will explain themselves:—

16 July, 1566. "At this Courte the Governo' Consulls and Companye have taken two shippes to freight: one called the Michael of Excester owners of the same Eustace Oliver and Thomas Browne and thother called the Bartlemew of Exmouth owner of the same Roberte Vynton for xl tone apece: to go for velys malaga and ther to take in their ladinge, or a thisside (in resons). And the owner or owners of the shipp to have for every tone of freight the some of xlviiij to be paid at the retorne of the same shipp according to the charterpartes thereof to be made. And the said owners have covenanted to make readye the same shipps a thisside the xvth daie of August next: And the Marchauntes laders of the said shipps shalbe also readie by the same daie with their wares, and shipp the same upon payne on hym and every of theim that shall make defaulte to paye dedd freight according to his or their porcions."

"And further upon conclusion and agreement of the premisses the saide Marchants gave to the owners to every of theim iiiijd in earnest, as a goddes penny: which the said owners gave backe ageye to the Box to the behoffe of the Poore: And farther more the owner and owners of every shipp and barke before named have upon the saide agreement covenauented and promised to geve to the house at their retorne this voyage the some of xs."

"Also at the said Courte the Governo' Consulls and Company have taken a barke to freight called the Mary Martyn of Excester, owners thereof Mr. William Hurste, Symon Knight and Thomas Martyn for fortie tonne To goo for Algarbe in Portugal and ther to take in her ladinge in flygges: And the owners to have for every tone the some of fuye and fortie shillinges, to be paide at the Barkes retorne accordinge to the charterpartie thereof to be made: And the saide Owners have covenanted to make readie the saide Barke, a thisside the saide xvth daye of August next. And the Marchantes laders of the same Barke shall also be readye by the same daye with their wares and shipp the same, upon payne aforesaide.”

Court held 6 August, 1566. “Those which are appointed to take shipping for this yeare have certified at this Courte that they have taken to freight one shipp called the Margaret Carwythen for lx tone: oner thereof Richarde Carwythen: to lade wynes at Juberaltare or Sherys, and the saide owner to have xliij s iiijd for a tone.”

VI. “Also they have taken to freight the Christopher of Dartmouth for lx tone, owner thereof John Prouse, to lade wynes at Juberaltare or Sherys: And the saide owner to have xliij s for a tone and a butt of hollocke for the whole freight.”

The Merchants’ Company had a Hall of their own in which they elected the Governor and other officers, transacted their business, and dined on election days. This Hall must not be confounded with the Merchants’ Hall, the property of the Chamber, which formed a part of the New Inn in High Street, on the site now occupied by Mr. Green’s premises, which Hall had more the character of an open market or a place of general resort for the cloth merchants. “Oure haule,” the Company’s Hall, is frequently alluded to in the minutes, and was well known, although diligent research has failed to trace its precise situation.

The first meetings of the Company were held in the Chapel Chamber of the Guildhall, and it may be inferred that their own Hall, taken on a lease and furnished by them, was not far distant, as the members were summoned by the bell (which still surmounts the Guildhall) of the Chapel of St. George, which formed a portion of the Guildhall premises.

The following extracts from the minutes relate to this part of the subject:—

Bellringing.—18 May, 1587. “At this Courte it is ordered by the whole generalitie that there shalbe yearly paid towards the ringinge of St. George’s Bell the some of tenne shillings, which Rent of Hall.—31st March, 1579. "Also at this Courte it is agreed that John Samforde shall have the yerelie rent of iiiijd for the Marchauntes Haule and the litle howse adjoininge to the same: whereof the Spanish Companye shall paye ls by the yeare and Marchauntes Adventurers of Exeter xxs. And also it is agreed that the saide John Samforde shall have v markes for and towards his charges bestowed in the saide haule."

Courte held 21st Nov. 1587. "Also at the same Court it is agreed that Mr. John Sampforde shall have xijd in full and clere discharge of certaine rente dewe by the Spanishe Companie for the Merchauentes Haule, and thereupon the said Mr. Sampforde hath delivered to this Companie one chest with twoo lockes and keis together with the seeinge bordes, formes, and all other impelmentes remayninge and beinge within o' haule'(the glasse only excepted.)"

Lease of Hall.—6 July 1602. "At this Courte Mr. Sampforde for the consideracion of a vi/ xiijs iiijd to be paid at the feast of S. Michael next doth graunt and lett to this Companie the hall for this Companie which they now use for thirttie yeares from the xxiiiijth daie of June last past yf the said John Samforde his wief and John his sonne so long live for a yearlie rent of a iij/ vis viijd quarterly to be paid. And if the said John Sampforde cannot graunte the said lease without a ffine to be levied, then the said John Sampforde is to paie the moitie of the said ffine."

It may be interesting to know what manner of men these were who composed this Guild. Hoker says they were the "chiefest and wealthiest men in the city." Fortunately we can go further than this and obtain a nearer acquaintance with them. The names of some of them are historical, the names of many are engraven on our memories by the charities they founded, and the features of a few are still preserved to us in their portraits which hang on the walls of the Council Chamber of the Guildhall. Let us take these latter first. There is—

John Peryam, son of John Periam, twice Mayor, and one of the three Merchants of Exeter who in 1549, on the memorable occasion alluded to at the commencement, supplied Lord Russell with the means which enabled him to raise the siege of Exeter. You can read his character in his countenance—resolute, energetic, imperious, a man who would have his way, and whom one would not care to thwart. He refused to accept the Governorship of the Company in 1585, because "he did not minde to remayne in this Cittie as an inhabitant, but to dwell at London where his howshold doth now remayne, and shewing other causes that he must nedes be absent from this Cittie for this yere or more." One of the "other causes" doubtless being that a residence near his brother, Sir William, the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, was advantageous in more ways than one. He was, however, subsequently twice elected Governor—on certain conditions and protestations, which he insisted upon—and twice Mayor of the City. He was knighted, and died at his seat near Crediton. He left by will—amongst numerous other benefactions—£1000 to be lent to five persons, being freemen of the Company, "especially to them of the meaner sort," £200 to each for three years.

Walter Borough, Mayor in 1610. A fine, grave, handsome man, with Jewish features, closely cut hair and well trimmed
One is almost prompted to say, with Salarino, in looking at that countenance.

"Your mind is tossing on the ocean;
There, where your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers."

He was Mayor of the City on two occasions in the years 1610 and 1621, and his name is still recorded on the list of our charitable benefactors.

Loyal William Hurst, the first elected Governor of the Company, and five times Mayor of Exeter—sufficient evidence of his amiable, courteous, and generous character if it were not written in his every feature. His son, who inherited his wealth, was too great a man to join the Guild, and is alluded to in a somewhat sarcastic minute, as Mr. William Hurst, Esquire. William Hurst's name is still remembered by us in connexion with the almshouses now situate in Spiller's Street. The original houses, which he built and endowed, occupied the site, just without the walls, where Northernhay Place now stands. (John Lant, another member of the Guild, further endowed these almshouses).

Two Latin lines on William Hurst's portrait demonstrate that he was of humble origin and was not ashamed of it—

"Non mihi lingua datur; qua possim dicere nomen:
Qualis eram: paucis: versa tabella notat."

One naturally refers to the back of the picture and finds—NOTHING!

Laurence Atwill, founder of the Almshouses which bear his name, and grandson of that Atwill who was five times Mayor of Exeter under four successive Sovereigns—

"He saw five princes which the sceptre bore,
Of these he was a magistrate to four."—Vilwayne.
William Hurst,
A.D. 1568 at 96.
Appendix

Joan Tuckfield, in the uncomfortable dress of the period, but with jewelled head-dress and golden girdle to show her quality. Her husband was a member of the Guild, and she was a benefactor to it, as well as to the City in other ways.

John Hoker—who does not know John Hoker? without whom Exeter would scarcely have had a published history. City Chamberlain, Burgess in Parliament, industrious, observant historian, his name should be a household word with us. The bright, intelligent face shows advanced life, but there is fire still in the eyes, and energy in the general expression. He is taken in the official robes, and wears a hat which is not only hideous, but enviously covers the best part of what must have been a good head.

The portrait of Hugh Crossing, the founder of St. John's Hospital, is fitly placed in the Grammar School, to the Trustees of which it was presented by the Corporation. Hugh Crossing was a member of the Guild, and probably became governor early in the seventeenth century after the time to which the records extend. He was Mayor of the city in 1609, and again in 1620, and died in 1621 at the early age of 55.

The portrait of Nicholas Spicer, which was formerly in in the Council Chamber, has been removed elsewhere. The name of the founder of Spicer's Charity is not, however, likely to be soon lost sight of. He was a member of the Guild, as were his brothers Thomas, William, and Christopher, each Governor in his turn. Then we find the names of Thomas Prestwood, who died during his Mayoralty, and Thomas Walker once Governor and twice Mayor, who left by will towards endowing a free Grammar Shool £400. Also Simon Knight, John Hele, William Martin, George Smyth (who was afterwards knighted), John Prouse and Thomas Martin; these all served as Members of Parliament for the City; and we meet with such familiar names as Buckenam

Follett, Geare, Ellacott, Yarde, Buller, Blackalle, Chaffe, Peryman, and Spurway. Of forty Governors in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, twenty-five were Mayors of the City—five thrice and three twice—sometimes holding both offices at the same time.

Ignatius Jurden, who in King James' time, had become a great merchant of Exeter. He petitioned the King through the Bishop for the better observance of the Lord's Day, being dissatisfied with the "Royal Book of Sports," which enjoined that the people might indulge in lawful recreation after Divine Service. His interference, however, so angered the King that he declared he would hang the fellow. He was one of the burgesses for the City in Parliament in 1624. It is recorded to his credit that when the plague visited Exeter with severity in the year 1625, creating such consternation that the Mayor and all the principal inhabitants fled from the City, he alone, acting as deputy Mayor, remained firmly at his post.

John Hackwill or Hakewell, merchant of Exeter. His eldest son, William, took his degree of M.A. at Oxford, was bred to the law, became a Master in Chancery and one of the Governors of Lincoln's Inn. He served in several Parliaments, wrote many learned works, and was executor of his kinsman, Sir Thomas Bodley. Another son, George, born in the parish of St. Mary Arches in 1598, was elected a Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and became Archdeacon of Surrey and Rector of Worcester College. He acquired great reputation by his writings, which were distinguished by their breadth and liberality of sentiment.

The family of Martyn or Martin—spelt in both ways indiscriminately—was a notable one in connexion with the Guild. There appear to have been three brothers, Nicholas, William and Thomas. Nicholas, the eldest, was twice Mayor of Exeter, and twice Governor, but he survived his last election as Governor only six months—his brother William filling the vacant chair for Hugh Crossing.
Taken in 1621, Aged 55.
Nicholas was evidently a wealthy man and a bold successful merchant. He was the first to join in any proposed venture and usually held the largest stake in it. He was a large contributor to the relief of the poor and to other local objects. Seldom any important business went forward without his having something to do with it either as adviser or suitor. He left two sons, his exors, William and Nicholas—the latter was admitted a freeman of the Company in 1599. William, born in 1562, entered Pembroke College, Oxford, 1579, and afterwards studied the law at the Inns of Court. He was made Recorder of Exeter in 1605, and was in good favor with the Court, until he wrote his "History of twenty Kings of England," which mightily offended King James. He was the author of several other learned works, and was a man of considerable literary attainments. The Company appointed him their standing Counsel, and from the liberality displayed towards him and from other evidence, "our Councillor," as he is called, must have been a great favourite.

William Martyn the elder, twice Mayor, was twice elected Governor. He appears to have been the equal of his brother Nicholas in wealth and enterprise. During his second mayoralty he disbursed from his own resources £305 in obtaining a mitigation of customs’ duties on woollen cloths. This was a large sum of money in those days. He had two sons, Thomas, a member of the Guild, and Mayor in 1612. Richard, the eldest, born in 1570, went to Pembroke College (whither his cousin had preceded him) as Gentleman Commoner in 1585. He signally distinguished himself at College, and removed to the Inner Temple in 1588; became eminent in his profession, and was returned to Parliament in 1601. He was reckoned one of the most accomplished and witty men of his age, and so charmed the King that he made him Recorder of London in 1618.
Appendix

The third brother, Thomas, joined the Guild in 1566, and was Governor in 1577.

Another of the name, and probably of the same family—

X. John—was admitted by a special Act on the election day, 1597, in consideration of important services rendered in a law suit which the Company were parties to.

John Davie or Davye, once Governor and thrice Mayor. His first mayoralty (and he was Governor of the Company the same year) was distinguished by a feast so magnificent, given in honor of the exiled King of Portugal, as to be thought worthy of historical record. He made a considerable fortune in merchandise, lived in Mary Arches parish, where he built and endowed Almshouses, and in the Church is still to be seen his monument with the following inscription:

"This marble monument and fading brass Might have been spared, for neither needed was,
To stand a register to Davies name;
Who, living, did erect a fairer fame,
And far more lasting: Whose foundation
Was firmly grounded on the corner stone:
Whose bar was faith; whose pillars piety;
And whose engravings, works of charity.
Then let the dead trust to a dying tomb;
But how can death in Davie find a room?
Whose soul in heaven alive doth aye remain Whose works on earth so many lives maintain."

His grandson John was created a baronet in 1641, the title being continued to the present day, and now borne by the respected family at Creedy park, Crediton.

In Mary Arches street and parish were some of the best private residences in the city, as we may infer from the records on the old monuments in the Church. Isacke (page 119) also informs us that a commission appointed to try one Jordan for high treason sat in trial at the house of John Croston, Register, in St. Mary Arches lane. The reader may, on inspection of Lawrence Atwill,
A.D. 1588 at 77.
Appendix the map, form his own conclusion as to the exact spot where John Davye’s house was situate. The following extract from the City Records may in some measure help him:

"The Chamber to John Davye, 23rd September, 1591, grant of two stables and gardens in Saint Mary Arches lane, between the said lane on the west, the highway next the city walls from Northgate to Friernhay on the north, the stables and garden of one Yorke on the east, and the gardens and stables of the Chamber on the south, which stables are now in the tenure of the said John Davye; rent reserved, 12s. With a proviso that the said John Davye, after the death of himself and Margaret his wife, shall bestow the premises to the good of the poor of Exeter."

Davye’s almshouses, erected in pursuance of the proviso, are still remaining, on the exact spot where the stables referred to were situated, viz., in Bartholomew street, at the corner of Mary Arches street. The door at the entrance to the courtlidge of the almshouses bears the initials "J. D." and the year 1592.

These are the men we should meet with could we transport ourselves backwards to the Exeter of three hundred years ago. But should we recognize the city itself? The city scarcely extended beyond the walls; Southernhay, a ditch and a dreary waste; St. Sidwell's parish comprising a few scattered houses, and St. David's even less. An inn stood where still swings the sign of the "Valiant Soldier," and between that and Larkbeare House were scarce half-a-dozen small houses; whilst on the other side, the monastery of the Grey Friars was the only building between the Southern gate and the open country and river.

Two or three cottages, beyond the walls, marked the way
Appendix to the Wynard’s hospital, the last of the buildings on the Magdalen road, with the exception of the isolated Lazar house in the ditch just beyond.

Within the city, on the spot occupied by Bedford Circus, stood Bedford House, the princely residence of the Earl of Bedford. The main entrance was from High street, through what is now known as Bedford street, across Catherine street, and under the massive gateway into the spacious quadrangle. The grounds, as nearly as possible, comprised the space included between Egypt and old Post Office lanes, Catherine street and the city wall. This is classic ground. Here, on Midsummer eve, at three o’clock of the afternoon, each member of the Guild was required to bring so many men with harness, arms and furniture, to set forth the Queen’s Watch—the annual review, as we should call it, of the Civic Guard. John Davie and five others were at one time officers in command, and twelve members were “Whysselers to goo with the watche and kepe them in araye,” aided no doubt by the big “drome.”

Here, the Lady Elizabeth Russell daughter of the Earl was given in marriage to the Earl of Bath, on which occasion the whole City yielded itself up to festivity, and high jinks were played on Southernhay. On this occasion as on all others our Guild was ever ready. It was resolved that one hundred and five calyvers, thirty-four corsletts, and five almon ryvets—these latter for the Captains—with the requisite number of men in armour “shall be provided for a muster or shewe to be sync before the Right Honorable Lorde therle of Bedforde,” and “that this Companye shall provide for everie calyver one pounde of the best corne pouther that may be gotten.”

“Such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a struck fowl or a hurt wild duck.”—1 Henry IV., Act 4, Sc. 2.

“Put me a caliver into Wart’s hand”—2 Henry IV., Act 3, Sc. 2.

1 7th August, 1582.
No. 46, High Street.
This Earl of Bath resided at Tawstock Court near Barnstaple; and in the diary of Philip Wyot, Town Clerk of Barnstaple (1586 to 1608), edited by Mr. J. R. Chanter, we find constant reference to the family, as his lordship took a prominent part in public affairs. The following extracts from the diary may not be without interest:

"xi March, 1587. Lorde Fitzwarren, son and heire of Lorde Bath, died at Tawstock suddenly but xvi months old."

"15 August, 1587. This day Ld. Bath's son was xtened called Robert Godfar, Sr Richd Greynfylde for Ld Chancellor, Sir Williem Mown for the E. of Essex, Lady Denys for the old Countes of Bedforde."

"1605. On Palm Sunday, 24 daye of March, dyed at Tawstock, the Countes of Bath, and that night following she was buryed, but the solemnization of her funeral was deferred until some tyme afterwards."

"The Monday beyinge the vith day of May, 1605, was the funeral of the late Elizabeth Countes of Bath solemnized at Tawstock, there came down from London three deputie harolds of armes, the principal mourner was the young lady Frances Bowchier, and there were viii other murners of the poorer sort of the same psh.; Mr. Saunders, the Earl of Bath's Chaplayne did preach that day; much meate and drinke eate and drank at Tawstock Court, all the poor had iiijd a piece and loaf of bread."

Between Egypt lane and the Cathedral was the town house of the Abbots of Buckfastleigh (now occupied by Mr. Dawson) and the Archdeaconry residence, both structures remaining to the present day.

Bampfylde House, north of Bedford circus, still exists, and its general plan can be easily traced. The small quadrangle in Bampfylde street, formerly Raden lane, into which the windows looked remains almost unaltered. In the year 1769, the Duke of Bedford, escaping from the fury of the populace—incensed at his supposed consent to a secret article in a treaty with France — found a refuge in this quadrangle. The garden belonging to the house was on the opposite side the way, where Pedrick's stables now stand. There are fine specimens of carved work existing, and the ceilings are in the elaborate style of the time. A grand old mantelpiece belonging to the dining hall was removed some years since to Poltimore House, but it dates from nearly half a century subsequent to the time we are writing of.

Perhaps one of the oldest rooms in Exeter is that used as an office by Messrs Harris and Wreford, in Gandy street. The royal arms over the chimney-piece are those of Elizabeth; on the left side are the arms of Roger Mallock, Mayor of Exeter, 1636, and on the other the arms of the Merchant Adventurers, of which Guild he was presumably Governor during his Mayoralty. The carved wainscot and cornice were probably added about the time of his mayoralty. The sumptuous decoration and expensive workmanship seen in these, as well as in the Tucker's Hall in Fore street hill, are excellent specimens of the period, and are evidences of the wealth and prosperity which abounded during the latter years of Elizabeth's reign, and throughout that of her successor.

The best parts of the city in those days were Preston street, Coombe street, St. Mary Arches parish, the east end of High street, Gandy street, and Paul street. There was a fine house also by Jan's Cross in Gandy street, occupied, no doubt, by one of our city merchants, and subsequently by Gandy, who gave his name to the street. In St. Mary Arches street, Pancras lane, Goldsmith street, we have specimens of the main streets of the period, probably little altered as to width, but having no longer the heavy, projecting gables thrust out, so that opposite neighbours could shake hands from their windows.

“By this, where houses, whelving houses meet,
And vault with beetle-brows a shelving street, Where stout St. Peter, on the corner stall Props the impending edifice from fall.”—Mobiad, Canto 4, p. 72.

The private houses had no windows in the lower story facing the street. The approach was through a gateway which led to a quadrangle whereon opened the windows. Sometimes a square of houses was built facing inwards towards an open space, the only entrance being through a gateway, which was carefully secured at night. These precautions were necessary in days when street lamps and watchmen were unknown.

High street, with its picturesque gables, quaint buildings, and windowless shops, extended nearly, without a break, from the East to the West gate.

At the “Quatre Voix” stood the conduit which distributed the water brought from the springs of St. Sidwell’s. Northgate street, on the one hand, and what is now known as South street on the other, were scarcely passable except for foot passengers and packhorses. The first part of South street, on the left, entering from the main street, was known as Cook’s row: proceeding through it we should have seen St. George’s Church on the right, intruding far upon the roadway; a little further down, on the opposite side, was the College kitchen, with the Yarn market in front of it, and, beyond, the extensive premises of the Bear Inn, surmounting Bell hill. Continuing our way to the South gate and passing through, if we turned sharply to the right, down the narrow path between the inner and outer defences—now indicated by Little Quay lane—we should have found ourselves outside the Water gate, with the store house adjoining, rented by the company from John Sampforde, at 6s 8d a year, for the purpose of storing the wood, which every winter was given away to the poor.

Hoker says that, long before his time, vessels came to this Water gate on the top of the spring tide, but that St. James’s wear and St. Leonard's (Trew's) wear then stopped the tidal waters. Goods were transported in barges from the craft which lay at anchor in Countess wear pool, through the canal or "New Cut" as it was called, to King's Arms sluice and the landing place near the Custom house. A century later the canal was continued to about a mile above Topsham, opening on the river by Trenchard's' sluice, which was done away with when the extension to Turf was carried out in 1830.

It may not be out of place here to record the indirect connexion of the company with a work, which would naturally be of vital importance to the merchants, viz., the shipway from the navigable Exe to the Quay. In Oliver's "History of Exeter" there is an account of the haven or canal, derived from a most carefully prepared memoir by the late Mr. P. C. De la Garde. From this we find that in the autumn of 1566 the first canal or water-course, constructed by John Trewe, was open for the navigation of vessels. It extended from a little below Countess wear bridge to Exeter quay, but being only three feet in depth, the largest vessels (if they may be called so) which could pass through did not exceed sixteen tons burthen.

On 6 September, 1574, we find in the city records that John Trewe, in consideration of £229 and a yearly rent of £30, releases 'all that the new haven or watercourse with the appurtenances uppon or neere the ryver of Exe' and all his interest therein, to the Mayor, Bayliffs, and Commonalty of Exeter; a reciprocal indemnity against liability in respect thereof being granted by the chamber.

The absence of any allusion to the canal in the minutes of the company suggests the inference, that they were content to leave the matter in the hands of the chamber, or that they had not acquired such a position as would warrant interference. It is not until 1577 that there is any reference to the subject, and then only with respect to the charges exacted at Topsham, which probably were retained as vested rights, and became extremely onerous when the Exeter quay and canal dues were superadded.

* Mr. Francis Davy, of Topsham, remembers entering the canal in a vessel through Trenchard's sluice. The gates were sometimes opened at ebb tide, and the water as far as Double locks allowed to flow out in order to scour the channel of the river.

"to Julie, 1577. At this Courte the Governor, Consulls, and Companye, whose names are hereunder wryten, Did take order and agree that John Samforde a freeman of this Companye shoulde ride to London and there to be their Deputie to deale for them and in their behalf accordinge to his discretion with Mr. Stubbes, as touchinge the cranage, wharffage, selerage, and portage of all thinges belonginge and apperteyninge to the Bayliffweke of Topsham and to the ryver of Exmouth. John Levermore                        Richard Dorchester."
Although Mr. Stubbes appears to have been vested with the privileges of the port of Topsham, the Earl of Bedford must have had some share in them, as the following minute shows, and it also indicates that the annuity of £30 to Trewe and the other responsibilities attending the new watercourse were transferred from the chamber to the company.

"11 Nov. 1580. The following extract from the Municipal Records shows in what manner the port was relieved of vexatious exactions, and completes the subject:—

“6 Nov. 1583. William Stubbes of Ractlyffe, Middlesex, to the Mayor, Bayliffs, and Commonalty of Exeter, Bond in £400, to secure a conveyance to the Mayor, Bayliffs, and Commonalty of ‘all that the crane or key and cranage and sellers of the porte of Topsham with the appurtenances in the Countye of Devon, and the fyshinge in the water of Clyste in the sayd countye, together with all storehouses, sellers, solers, roydet ground, and lande, and also all fees, offices, tolls, customs, pryvyledges, prehemynences, lyberties, profytts, and emolument whatsoever to the said crane, key, and cranage, sellers, and fyshynge, or to anye of them in any wise belonginge, appertaynynge or incident,’ for the term of thirty years, granted to him by letters patent, 16th May, 25 Elizabeth.

The conveyance in similar terms follows.

As a walled and fortified city Exeter was probably better able to protect itself against external enemies during the earlier years of Elizabeth’s reign than at any other period prior or past. If we may judge from the successful resistance to the protracted Appendix siege of 1549, the walls, towers, bastions, and gates must have been in excellent order.

There was the Castle of Rougemont, almost impregnable in the strength of its position and defences: the approach from the city was by the great tower at the end of Castle street, which still remains a magnificent specimen of Norman architecture; the imposing arch, now within the grounds of the residence of Mrs. Gard, must have gained still greater impressiveness from the deep fosse at its base winding away on either side. The steeply scarped ground up to the wall is now laid out in tasteful walks which lead to a look-out tower. A modern structure has almost entirely displaced the original, but sufficient remains to indicate its position and utility. Commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country, it was a convenient spot from which to direct sorties of the garrison by the subterranean way and sallyport close adjacent.

Two bastions still remain in tolerable preservation, one in the grounds of the Club house commanding the approach from the north, and the other in the grounds of "The Vineyard," commanding the south and east. The city wall from Northernhay to the east end of Southernhay is no longer traceable except by a fragment which appears behind the premises of No. 266, High street. These premises were built of the materials taken from the eastgate which was removed in 1784, and the statue of Henry the Seventh which surmounted the exterior of the gate, now finds a place in a niche in the front of the modern building. At the back of the houses in Southernhay the wall is still in tolerable preservation, and at the lower end, in the grounds of the Bishop's Palace, are the remains of the Barbican through which Bishop Carey, by an order of the Privy Council, obtained, in spite of the opposition of the Mayor and Corporation, an access to the open country in order to get the benefit of the air. The passage and wickets are still available, but are not now made use of. A few yards further down are the remains of another tower, and adjoining are four embrasures the only ones to be found in the broken circuit of the walls. From this spot, down to the Water gate, the wall may be plainly traced. The gate is gone, and the battery tower, protecting it and the approaches from the river, is gone; but the arch in the wall behind the Custom house, still known as "Battery steps," indicates either a sallyport, or what is more probable, a means of access to the leat for the purpose of obtaining supplies of water. Proceeding further, we follow the course of the wall to West gate, the site of which is easily recognizable, but beyond this it extends but a few yards, when a considerable breach intervenes till we reach Bartholomew yard. At the corner, now occupied by Paradise place, stood Snayle Tower one of the principal western look-outs. The wall affords a terrace walk, between the two cemeteries, from this to Bartholomew-street, where we see that the houses on the left have their foundation on the wall itself, which is plainly discernible at the rear as seen from the yard of the "Crown and Sceptre" Inn. Crossing the road, over the site of the old North gate, and proceeding up Northernhay street, we have the wall on our right, and in one spot, just below the stonemason's yard, we trace faint indications of loopholes for the discharge of arrows. When the building of the Albert Memorial Museum necessitated the taking down of a portion of the city wall, a section of it revealed a beautiful specimen of herring-bone work, a drawing of which was taken by Mr.

1 The level of the gardens behind these houses is about 12ft. below that of the road in front. The fosse must have been of great depth, if we may judge from the made ground disclosed when the main drain was laid down.

1 The Bishop was required to build the bridge across the ditch on posts so that there should be no impediment to the flow of the water.

2 The existence of this work, which was pointed out by Col. Harding to a party of the Archaeological Society visiting Exeter 1861, is evidence of the antiquity of the wall as it now stands.
G. Townsend, and is now in his possession. With the continuation of the wall to the castle we have completed the circuit.3

The order of proceedings on election days will be best presented to the reader by extracting, verbatim, a copy of the minutes of one of those occasions. The day selected has no extraordinary features, but is a fair example of the business transacted at these annual meetings.

3 Not many years since it was the custom for the Mayor and Corporation once in every year to perambulate the City walls—"beating the bounds" as it was termed. Due notice was given for all obstructions to be removed, and party-gates to be opened, so that the worshipful body might have free passage. What, with encroachment in some places, and destruction in others, but little of the wall is left to walk upon, and thanks to the energy of so-called modern improvers, at no distant period all trace of our historic monuments of the past will have been swept away.

The concluding—to some the most important—business of the XV. day is the Governor's dinner, towards the expense of which he is allowed the sum of five marks, and if he "doo provide a bucke Appendix to the said dynner he shall have allowed him also xiiij s iiijd for the same over and above his other allowance.” He is also paid “five shillings to be bestowed towards the pot to be boyled for the poore prisoners in the Queene’s gayell.”

There are some amusing perplexities in respect of these Governors’ dinners. It was no doubt a sacred point with the members that they should, first, take place; and, secondly, if possible, on the 6th day of August, the memorable anniversary of the raising of the siege of Exeter. Now Friday was a fish day, and Saturday was not a flesh day, and Sunday was not to be thought of; and at certain recurring periods it naturally happened that the 6th of August would fall on one of those days. To fix a day to suit everybody’s convenience and be agreeable to the Governor was a problem not easily solved.

In 1599 Mr. Martin the Governor was singularly afflicted. He happened to be Mayor at the same time, and it was the custom of the Mayor (as confirmed by the minute I consult) to entertain on Mondays. The election day happened to fall on a Monday, and the Merchant’s Hall not being large enough to contain so many guests, or it being contrary to etiquette to entertain those not free of the Company therein, it was decided that the double banquet should be served in his own house.

During the famine in 1596, the Court began to discuss the dinner question a month before the day the feast became due, and charitably decided that there should be “no dynner kept and that the money allowed for that purpose should be employed in corne and geven to poore householders;” but, alas, for the weakness of all human resolves! Not a week had elapsed ere the Court resolved that they could not give up the dinner, but the poor should be fed all the same, and 8l 8s 6d was voted for that purpose.

But the real business of the Courte is transacted at the ordinary meetings.
Red Lion Court, Magdalen Street.
Appendix  We are introduced to a somewhat disagreeable phase of the social life of the period by frequent references to contentions and quarrels. Religious differences would, of course, be a fertile source of acrimonious argumentation; but the growing freedom of thought and action, and a commerce expanding under the genial influence of State encouragement (engendering keen competition and rivalry), would naturally lead to opinions too plainly outspoken, and disputes too warmly contested. A very strong regulation was established in 1572 against "brawlinge and fflyghtinge," which it seems had previously prevailed, and any witness of such unseemly conduct was required to present the same to the Court under a penalty of fine. Notwithstanding, we find that at the Court held 24th February, 1575, it was certified, "That not onlie John Levermore spake unseemelie and opprobrous wordes to Richarde Swete, but also that Richarde Swete spake the like wordes unto the saide John Levermore: Therefore it is agreed that ether of them shall paye his broke to the howse, accordinge to an acte heretofore made in that behalf, which is iijs iiijd a pece: And for that also there was unseemelie and uncourtuose wordes spoken at this Courte betwene George Periman and Thomas Martyn in the presence of the Governo' Consultes and whole Comanye, therefore it is also agreed upon by the saide Governo', &c., that ether of them shall paye to this Comanye for their defaulcte therein iijs iiijd."

At the same Court "Richarde Denys was presented for nastie and opprobrous wordes wch hee gave of late to Richarde Purye, being a freeman of Comanye, at the Busshops Palace."

In the following year John Davye the Treasurer was presented "for unseemelie wordes, wh hee gave of late to Davy Vilvaine in Northinghay: wherefore it is adiudged by the whole Comanye the said John Davye shall pay to this societie iijs iiijd, so upon his submission and payment thereof the Governo' gave hym backe ageyne xvjd."
Appendix

In June 1576, it was "enacted, ordeyned, and throughelie agreed upon, That whatsoever hee be, beinge free of this Companye, that doeth hereafter speake any slanderous, unsemelie, or unhonest wordes, by any other his bretheren free of this Companye whether they be in presence, or beinge absent, that everie suche pson shall paye to this societie, for suche his ill behaviour, suche greate ffyne as shalbe thought good by the Governo', &c."

In June 1593, "it is presented that Willm. Chappell did assaulte and stricke John Dipforde" and was fined xvjs viijd. In September following "Jasper Horsey doth present Pawle Trigge for speakinge of unsemely wordes by hime," for which he had to pay iijxs iiiijd, reduced to 1s on his submission.

In July in the following year John Hackwill discovered that Clement Owleborrowe and his son had been guilty of adventuring, not being free of the Company, and was subject to "unsemelic wordes" from the delinquent, who was presented for both offences.

From the minutes we find the Clerk, John Felde, was appointed at a salary of 13s 4d a year—payable quarterly—with perquisites for preparing charter parties and indentures of apprentices. That "a new ansine of redd and grene sylke sarcenet" was purchased for £4 10s 3d. That Mr. Doctor Tremayne interceded for Robert Prowse, and got his fine for a "broke" mitigated. That Morice Downe is to have the stock of the house, £20 (on loan), in consideration of great loss at sea by rovers. That apprentices trading on their own account shall pay 6s 8d to the house, 6d to the Clerk, and 4d to the "Bedell." That woman's rights were admitted when Widow Webber was lent the £20 house money.

That an apprentice of a freeman was bound to claim the freedom of the Company within a year, under the penalty of £10, and was also required to be free of the City. That every
The North Gate (Exterior).
Appendix son instead of the eldest only) of every freeman may be admitted.

XXIII. That 13s 4d annually was left by the will of John Ellacott for a “belman that goeth by night.”

That William Prouse was admitted a freeman at the request of Sir William Periam, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and John Prouse at the solicitation of the Earl of Essex, and that the said John was subsequently fined for using “unseemlie” words on Northernhay.

That there is much discussion on the reformation of kersaies and woollen goods, and we are suddenly startled by an order that James Boyer for “comittinge of a murder uppon one hayman ys by the handes of the whole Companie dismissed.”

We acquire also some information as to the value of musical instruments in the memo, that “Mr. Yarde hath bought a new drome at London which cost xlvijs iiiijd and hath solde o’olde drome for xxx.”

One minute discloses a curious mode of settling a difficulty:—

“1st July 1589. At this Courte ther was certaine controversie betwene the howse and Mr. John Blackall, concerninge certaine money by him demanded of the saide howse, which said controversie was before this tyme referred to the order and determinacon of Mr. Thomas Chappell, Maio’, and Mr. John Peryam, which said controversie ys nowe by them determined. And they do awarde that the said John Blackall shalbe paied by the Treasurer of this Companie of tenne shillings in money and syxte shillinges towards the buying of a velvett night cappe. And so the said John Blackall doth acquitt the whole Companie of all manner of matters from the begininge of the wourlde untill this presente daie.”

Let us not be irreverent on the subject of night caps. Dr. Doran tells us that in the days of Elizabeth and James no Puritan divine ever went to bed but with his head in a night cap
Appendix of black silk tipped with white, and doctors of medicine and privy councillors sank to rest in night caps wrought with gold silk. It might have been with these worthies, as it was with the lady of story, that they wished to present a creditable appearance in case of fire; and really the contingency of a sudden exposure to the gaze of the profane was a very probable one. In the inventory of the goods and chattels of the Guild will be found, amongst other things, twenty-four leather buckets and an iron crook. This latter instrument was for the purpose of pulling down the gables and woodwork of the houses adjoining one that happened to be on fire, in order to prevent its spreading.

XXVII.

The principal trade being with France a lively interest would, of course be taken by the merchants in the French import duties.

In 1572 there appears to have been a commercial treaty entered into with the French King, which is alluded to in the following correspondence:

“21st August 1572. Also at this Courte there was a letter delivered to the Governor, Consul and Company, directed to them and others the Marchauntes of Totnesse, by certen Commissioners at London, the copie whereof followeth—

"Right Worshipfulls o' humble commendacions yee shall understande that wee have receaved yor lre bearinge date the ixth daye of this present moneth of August which came not unto o' handes, untill the xxvth of the saide moneth: But assone as we receaved the same and had perused it, dyd sende the saide lre to Totnesse to the Marchauntes there being as well directed unto them as unto us: And furthwith caused the Marchauntes of Exon to come together, who did conferr as touchinge the effect of your saide lre: And thereupon dyd appointe one of the Marchauntes of or towne of Exon, namelie Richard Swete, and the Marchauntes of Totnesse have appointed an other, the skylfullest amonge us in knowledge, as touchinge the newe customes in fraunce, who will repaier unto yor worshippes, and geve youe to understande thereof, desiringe you to accept them in our behalf. And thus wee commyte youre worshippes to the tuicion of Almightye God who alwaies preserve you: from Exon the xxxth of August 1572."

This difficulty appears to have been satisfactorily surmounted, for no further complaint is recorded for nearly ten years. In Appendix 1582, however, new troubles are heralded by an order from the Lord Treasurer of England, “to restrain all shipping that means to goe for Burdeaux, Nante, and other places of Fraunce.”

In the following year the storm bursts. The Merchants determined to leave no means untried to relieve themselves from the oppressive exactions of the French customs, entered upon a suit, which, extending over two years and entailing much trouble and expense, was, it may be inferred, carried to a successful issue. Indicative of the times is the “douceur” to the French Ambassador on the conclusion of the dispute. The minutes relating to this suit are all here entered in their proper order.

“4 Sept. 1582. At this Courte ther was the copie of a yeare read from the Right Honorable the L. Threasorer of Englande, directed to the customer and other officers of her Maties porte of Exon, restrayning all shipping that means to goe for Burdeaux, Nante, and other places of Fraunce to lade wynes, not to departe before the daye of next ensuynge: which yeare beres date the of 1582.”

“At this Courte ther was a Ire reade from the right wo’ Sir Ames Poulet and Sir Thomas Leighton Knt., her Maties Governors of the Isles of Jersey and Garnesey, as touchinge ther frendeshippes and furtheraunce for an incorporacion to be had for the trade of Brytayne, to be reduced into the saide islandes (which Ire was also published and reade at the last Courte) for which cause the Companye beinge assembled with dyverse Marchauntes of other townes adiyning, and had moche debatinginge touchinge the same, and at last for dyverse causes Appendix. And being alleged dyd finde it verie inconvenient for the estate of the commonwealth that in the tyme of peace the saide trade should be brought into the saide llandes: Whereupon it was ordered that lres should be writen to the saide S. Ames Poulet and Sir Thomas Leighton to this effecte: viz., to give them thanckes for their goode will in that behalf: And also to pray them to stande good frendes in oure suyte, which wee pretend to presente for the suppressinge the newe customes and exactions lately raysed upon us in the parties of ffraunce and Britayne.

"And for the presentinge of the saide suyte the companye dyd then consider that it was requisite to have some fit and skylfull man that woulde take the paynes to preferr and folowe the saide suyte as well to the Queenes hignes and her moste honorable Counsell: as also unto the ffrenche kinge, Whereupon there was nominated two Parsons which the Companye thought most fitteste for that purpose: viz., Andrew Geare of Exeter, and Thomas Pope the younger of Taunton. So it was put to be judged by handes, so the Companye dyd chuse and appointe the saide Thomas Pope to be their Attorney and Deputie in this behalf.

"Also the Companye had then to consider howe the saide Thomas Pope shoulde be answered and paied for his paynes and charges that he shoulde be at about the presentinge of the saide suyte, and at last dyd conclude and agree: That if the saide Thomas Pope doo obtayne the saide suyte and get us free of the saide newe customes then he is to have for his paynes over and besides his reasonable charges and expences two hundred crownes: And if he cannot obtayne the same then he is to have over and besides his saide charges and expences but one hundred crownes towards his paynes. Provided alwayes that if the saide Thomas Pope goo no farther then London and cannot obtayne his suyte ther, then hee is to be ordered for his travell and paynes besides his reasonable charges and expences as the Marchauntes of Exon and other the townes and places afore-saide shall thinke good.

"And also it is ordered at this Courte that a suplication shalbe wreten from us unto the right honorable Lord-therle of Bedforde to let hym to understande of our suyte before wee proceede Appendix therein, and to request his hono' with the rest of the Ll. and others of her Maties most honorable Privie Counsell, to direct ther favorable Ires unto her Maties Ambassadors in Ffraunce for the redresse thereof. And farther it is thought good that the saide Thomas Pope shall have a Ire of Attorney from us to authorize hym to deale for us in our saide suyte."

"13 June. Ther was a suplication which was appointed at oure laste Courte to be sente from us unto the right honorable Lorde therle of Bedforde for his furtheraunce of oure suyte which wee pretende for the suppressinge of the newe customes latelie raysed upon Marchauntes in the parties of Ffraunce and Brytayne.

"Also ther was made a Lre of Attorney made by the Companye and the Marchauntes of other townes adjoyning: To Thomas Pope of Taunton, Marchaunte, authorizing hym to presente oure saide suyte.

"Also ther was reade a bill in what order the charges and paynes of the saide Thomas Pope shalbe paied and answered unto hym : which hee shalbe at and layed oute aboute the saide suyte. All which Ires and writinges beinge reade were subscribed aswell by the handes of dyverse Marchauntes of Exeter, as also by sundry other Marchauntes of Totnes, Tyverton, and Collompton: And forasmoche as ther wanted the handes of those of Taunton, Charde, and Lyme, the Companye dyd order that the saide Ires and writinges should be sente to the saide Thomas Pope at Taunton that hee may repayer unto them to get ther handes thereunto as hee had promised.

"Also it was ordered at this Courte : That a bill of instructions shouldbe made and sente also from us unto the saide Thomas Pope with the saide Ires and writinges for his better instruction therein : the coppie of which bill of instructions doo hereafter ensue, viz.:-

"14 June 1583. Lres and instructions to be delivered and geven to our trustie frende Thomas Pope the younger of Taunton Marchaunte, as touchinge oure suyte which wee commyte unto hym for the suppressinge of the newe customes and exactions latelye raysed upon Inglishe Marchauntes in the parties of Ffraunce and Brytayne.

"Ffirst youe shall receave two Ires to the right Wo' Sir Ames Poulet and S' Thomas Leighton Knights, her Maties Governo' Appendix of the Isles of Jersey and Garnsey, as answer unto their Wo'Ire.

"Also a supplication from us to the right honorable Lorde therle of Bedforde.

"Also our Lre of Attorney whereby wee authorize youe to presenta our suyte.

"Also our bill for the aunswereinge of youe for your paynes and charges to be taken therein.

"All which Ires and writings wee praye youe accordinge to youre promise to get some of the anciente Marchauntes of the townes of Taunton, Charde, and Lyme, to subscribe thereunto as wee of Exeter, Totnes, Tyverton, and Colompton have done.

"Ite our mynde is: That youe sende us the bills from Taunton, Charde, and Lyme subscribed with the handes of suche as wilbe contributory to the charges of this our saide suyte accordinge to their promisses as well of Exeter and other places have done, before you proceede or goo any farther in our saide suyte.

"Also our mynde is: That if you have no good lykinge that our saide suyte will take place when youe be at London, that youe staye the presentinge thereof and proceede no farther therein.

"And wee praye youe, that if you goo thro with this our suyte: That with as moche conveniente speede as youe maye, youe sende us worde from tyme to tyme aswell when youe are at London as beyonde the seas howe all things doo passe, that you may have answere from us with the best ayde wee can for your furtheraunce therein.

"And it is ordered at this Courte: That where' Mr. Lever-more our Governo' on the behalf of the Companye and at their request hath put his hande to the bill for the answereinge of Thomas Pope for his charges and paynes to be taken aboute our saide suyte, the whole Companye doo promise and agree to see hym acquitted and discharged thereof, as the averedges shall arise.

"And further it is agreed and ordered that Mr. Thomas Spicer and Richard Swete shall collecte and gather upp all suche averedges of this porte of Exeter, as is latelie appointed for to be collected, towards the defraying of the charges for the suppressing of the newe customes lately raysed in the parties of Ffraunce and Brytayne: And they to be allowed reasonablie for their paynes."

"Memorandum that the xiiiijth daye of June 1583, 'oure Governo' did receave from the Marchauntes of Totnes a Ire being directed from Mr. Thomas Wylson, Valentine Dalye, and Peter Edborough, Commyssioners, dated ixth of August in anno 1572, directed as well to the Marchauntes of Exeter as those of Totnes, touchinge certene newe customes then raysed in dyverse places in the parties of Brytayne, onnerous to oure Ingleshe Marchauntes. And therewithall dyd receave from those of Totnes a bill of Customes at Morles, before the Queene's Maties reigne in anno 1588.

"And also dyd receave an other bill of customes at Saint Malowes, in her Maties reigne in anno 1572. And also an other bill conteyning the custome due at Roan upon cloth in anno 1558.

"Which Ire and bills of customesoure saide Governo' dyd sende furthwith unto the saide Thomas Pope that hee maye shewe theim unto his Counsell whereby it might be a further- aunce of his suyte."

"16 Oct. 1583. At this Courte Robert Pope of Taunton brought in a bill of exchaunge of xviij/iijs ixd made by Thomas Pope the younger of Taunton,oure Attorney for the presenting oure suyte for the suppressing of the newe customes latelie raysed upon Ingleshe Marchauntes in the parties of Ffraunce and Brytayne. But bycause the saide bill was directed to one Richard Skynner of London and not unto this Companye, nor had any certificate from the saide Thomas Pope touching the some: Yt was referred untill this Companye have further understanding thereof."

"3 Dec. 1583. At this Courte Thomas Pope the younger of Taunton,oure Attorney for the obteyning of oure suyte at the Courte of Ffraunce is latelie retorned from thence, came in and declared of his proceedinges therein, and gave us to understande that hee had not as yet gone through with the saide suyte but had good hope the same maye be obteyned very shortly if it be folowed. And brought in an order or decree from the saide Courte of Ffraunce touching the same under the right honorable M' Appendix. S' Henry Cobham, Knight, Lorde Imbassadour there. And also brought in his accompt of expences and charges which hee hath byn at in the prosecuting of the saide suyt: Whereupon it is ordered at this Courte that the saide Thomas Pope shall have paiied hym upon a reckning lxl, and that the Marchauntes of Totnes, Lyme, and Exeter, shall disburse and paye furthwith xxx/ oute of everie place, untill suche tyme as the Marchauntes of those places and of thother townes adioyning maye come together and bring in the accompte of everie place and the money collected towards the defraying of the saide charge that everie place maye bere his parte indifferentlie."

"6 August 1584. It is ordered that Mr. John Davie o' newe Governo' this yeare, Mr. John Sampforde and Richard Bevis shalbe audito' to peruse and take the accompte of Thomas Pope for his travaile into Ffraunce about o' late suyt at the Courte ther, and for Mr. Sweetes accompte for money collected by him towards the defrainge of the charge thereof, and also for o' clarke's accompte and what money he shall have for wrettinge of Ires and makeinge of other wrettinges and paines takinge theraboute, and bringe in there proceedings at the next Courte."

"28 August 1584. It is ordered that Mr. Sweete shall ride to Totnes aboute the collection for the ffrench suite, and he to be reasonably considered for his paines and to have the Governo' Ire.

Disputes and complaints with France were of constant occurrence, arising from the insecure state of the Channel, owing to pirates and rovers of the nations infesting the coasts. In 1586 Duke Mercurye's fine ship laden with wines was taken by the Bark "Burr" of London, and in retaliation he seized all the ships and their cargoes belonging to Exeter, which were then in the port of Morlaix. Our merchants offered to make ample restitution, and with the assistance of Lord Burghley, the dispute it is presumed was settled. We have the grievance however of exactions and oppressive duties occasionally cropping up until 1598, when one Medlande of Totnes proposes to smooth all difficulties for £300.

During all this time it was frequently under discussion to bring the trade to the isles of Jersey and Guernsey, so as to avoid the French coasts altogether, and lessen the risks from pirates on that side the channel.

Touching these pirates, they appear to have been particularly troublesome about the year 1578, for we find that a Queen's ship was specially requested by the Merchants to be stationed off our coast for the protection of the shipping, and £100 was ordered to be collected towards defraying the expense. In answer to the request, however, Her Majesty most graciously showed her confidence in Exeter men, and voluntarily granted them a commission to fit out their own war ship with the same powers and privileges as the Queen's ships possessed. "Most humblie dutifullie and thankfullie" did the Merchants receive this royal mark of favour; and right well did they reciprocate it ten years later, when the Company alone provided one thousand pounds weight of gunpowder for Her Majesty’s service. Again in 1601, during the war with Spain, the Company presented four hundred weight of gunpowder for Her Majesty’s service.

It might be said that the Merchants were only contributing to the protection of their own interests, and some grounds for the assertion may be found in a minute of 1632, to the effect that a change of captains is desirable in the “shippe and pynnace” which “garde our coaste,” and a messenger is sent to Mr. Jopson, the Secretary to the Admiral at Plymouth to that end, with a gift of twenty pounds, or more if necessary, for his friendship.

The endless difficulties with Spain up to the time of the dispersion of the Armada would, in themselves, occupy a volume. Accounts were continually being made up between the two countries, without ever coming to a settlement. In 1572 the western Merchants were ordered to give the Queen’s Commissioners, sitting in Guildhall, London, knowledge of all the injuries, personal and material, they had suffered from the King of Spain and his subjects, that restitution might be made. During the few months prior to the Spanish invasion the business was very active in this particular.

The Inquisition seized British sailors in Spanish ports, and endeavoured to convert them by force or by torture, the Queen vainly protesting that the deck of an English ship was English soil. Reprisals were natural enough and perhaps encouraged, and anything Spanish was considered legitimate prey. It is rather to the credit of our Merchants, that, at a time when a Spaniard was looked upon as the child of the devil, they should vote the sum of five shillings towards the burial of a poor Spaniard killed in a fray at Dartmouth.

“vijth June 1580. At this Courte it is ordered that o’
Appendix Threasorer this yeare shall paye unto oure Governor Mr. Phillipp Yarde xxx for somoche laid owte by him for charges to and amongst certen Spanyardes which were latelie taken by rovers out of the harbo' of Dartmouth: and their shipp and goodes taken from them, and they put a land, having nothing left."

Strange to say not a word is to be found in reference to the chief event of the time—the expedition of the great Armada against this country. In making up an account of the wrongs sustained at the hands of the Spaniards, there is mention of the injuries inflicted "by the Holy Howst as they term it," but this is all. We know that the Merchants of Exeter did, at that time, contribute their fair share towards the defence of the country; but there is no mention of it in the minutes of the Guild.

It will be remembered that early in the history of the Guild, the Adventurers opened a trade with Spain, and trafficked in raisins and wine. In 1577 overtures were made by the London Company "trading Spain and Portingall," to establish a similar Guild in Exeter. This appears to have been done, and a charter granted, the members being taken chiefly from the old Company. Probably they kept their own books and records, so we find no account of their proceedings further than that they paid fifty shillings a year for the use of the Merchants' Hall."

The record is interesting in this respect, that there is no mention of such a Company in the published histories of Exeter; and it may fairly be inferred that the extensive and important trade between the west country and Spain, which exists to the present day, owes its permanence and success, if not its origin, to this Spanish Guild.

Those sympathizers with the Merchants in their supposed afflictions and oppressions, would naturally look to the customs duties as the means employed for easing them of their hard earned gains.

1 See page 33.
Appendix  There is not in our record a single complaint or remonstrance until the year 1591, when combined action is taken on the part of the western Merchants to prosecute a suit for the "mittigating" of customs duties on woollen cloths. Mr. William Martin, the Mayor, appears to have entered upon the business at first single handed, and to have expended £305 out of his own pocket. The bold attitude assumed by the Merchants probably led to a satisfactory compromise. In 1600, too, the heavy expenses of the war with Spain necessitated the imposition of a new custom to be continued for four years on the export of cloth, but again the Merchants protested against the tax in itself, and the time for which it was to be continued. The last we find of this suit is contained in a minute dated 19 February 1601.

"19 Feb. 1601. At this Courte it is agreed that Mr. Governor and Mr. Hughe Crossinge shall ride to Dorchester Assizes of purpose to conferr with Mr. Recorder of Exeter and the Officers of Weymouth concerninge a new custome of late raised uppon wollen clothes, transported for s'fraunce outwarde and for all other marchaundizes homewardes. And further the whole Companie doe agree to paie two thirdes towards their charges not onelie for a iorney by them of late made to Weymouth as also for this iorney to Weymouth and Dorchester."

There is also an imposition of 10s a tun upon Gascon wines towards the provision of Her Majesty's house (1595) which Mr. Mainwaring offers to discharge for £115 paid down, which sum was readily subscribed and the duty got rid of. Customs abuses occupying a few lines, and a complaint against excessive Alnegers' fees in two short minutes, make up the sum total of the grievous exactions during a period of forty years! It is only fair, however, to read an entry which might, to prejudiced minds, throw some light on the subject, and account in some measure for the rarity of complaints.

History tells us that Sir Walter Raleigh had certain mercantile privileges conceded to him by the Queen, i.e., he was granted permission to export cloth from Exeter; he had the Vintner's licences, and certain Customs' perquisites. These concessions of themselves would cause him to be held in no great regard by the Merchants, but I think we may infer, from what little is recorded of him in our minutes, that he was anything but a favorite with them.

At the Court held 15th April 1586, a defence is instituted against Sir Walter Raleigh and his officers for the taking away of the excessive fees upon cockets and certificates. In the following month, Sir Robert Dennys, Recorder of the City, is entreated to sit on behalf of the Company on the commission touching Sir Walter Raleigh.

Two years later, returning heart-sick and weary from an unsuccessful expedition to the west, he offered the benefit of all his discoveries in America, retaining one-fifth of the profits, to our Merchant Adventurers, and was met with this rebuff "that they nor anie of them woulde consent thereunto nor put their handes and scales to the said instrument for divers and sundrie speciall causes then alleged."

This is all that is recorded of the great Sir Walter, but it is significant, and indicates that there was but little sympathy for the great discoverer, and no confidence in his adventures. Not so with his half brothers—the Gilberts—as will presently be shown.

Who does not know the name of John Davis, and what schoolboy has not the name of Davis's straits geographically impressed on his memory? This bold navigator and persevering adventurer was the first to endeavour practically to solve the theory of the North-west passage through North America to the Pacific Ocean, which has since cost so many valuable lives, and which, at this present time, occupies the attention of more than one nation.

It may not be generally known how closely John Davis1 and his expeditions were connected with our citizens. Our minutes reveal much information on the subject, and as an introduction an extract from Hackluyt (vol. iii, p. 129) is quoted.

"The letters patents of the Queene's Majestie granted to Master Adrian Gylbert and others, for the search and discovery of the North-west Passage to China."

Elizabeth, &c. Forasmuch as our trustie and well beloved subject Adrian Gilbert of Sandridge, in the Countie of Deuon, Gentleman, to his great costes and charges, hath greatly and earnestly travelled and sought, and yet doth trauell and seeke, and by divers meanes indevoureth and laboureth, that the passage unto China and the Iles of the Moluccas, by the north-westward, northeastward, or northward, unto which part or partes of the world none of our loyall subjects have hitherto had any traffique or trade, may be discovered, known, and frequented by the subjects of this our Realme. 6 Feb. 1583-4."

Adrian Gilbert we see lived at Sandridge, where also dwelt John Davis. These two must often have discussed, with chart and plan, the question of the north-west passage, and Gilbert seems to have not only brought his friend to his own way of thinking, but to have made him an enthusiast in the cause. The first expedition was fitted out by Mr. Secretary Walsingham and by divers worshipful Merchants, amongst whom our Exeter men found a place, as will be seen by the following minute:—

"16 Jan., 1585. At this Courte there were certaine Articles Whereunto the Companie did answere that forasmoche as they were adventurers already with Mr. Adrian Gilbte in a voyiage unto China they will not adventure anie more in anie suche voyages untill they see that voyage ended or some successe thereof."

In the following June, the "Barke Sunneshine of London, 50 tunnes, and the Moonshine of Dartmouth, 35 tunnes," set sail under the command of John Davis, and after various adventures, returned home on the 30th September.

The second expedition is the one most interesting to us, as we are shown the actual stake which each adventurer had in it. The entry in the Minute Book is dated 19th April, 1586, and is as follows:

"19 April, 1586. Here followeth the names of those persons that did adventure there money with Mr. Adrian Gilbte and Mr. John Davies in a voyiage for the discovery of China, the siveth daie of Aprill in the xxvij yeare of the rayne of o' soverayne Ladie Elizabeth:

1 The pretended voyage here referred to was realized in an expedition fitted out by Sir Walter Raleigh, which set forth from Plymouth shortly afterwards, and was a genuine attempt to colonize Virginia, the native name of which was Wyngandacoia. An account of the expedition and the cause of the failure of its chief object forms the subject of a Paper read by Mr. R. W. Cotton at the Meeting of the Devonshire Association at Barnstaple in 1867.

It will be seen that our merchants not only contributed the largest share in money, but they were also the owners of the ships.

Mr. William Sanderson, the nautical instrument maker of London, a man of great importance in his day on account of his scientific knowledge, the uncle of John Davis, had an interest also in the expedition, and no doubt fitted the ships with the expensive instruments which were necessary for the voyage.

The ship "Mermayd of 120 tunnes and a pinnesse of tenne tunnes named the North Starre, together with the Sunneshine and Mooneshine" made up the little fleet which sailed from Dartmouth on the 7th May 1586. John Davis announced his return from this voyage in a letter to his uncle Sanderson, dated Exon, 14th October 1586, but the little "pinnesse" never came home.

A few words in the last minute on this subject shows that the object of our Merchants was to open a legitimate trade with China and India in the cloth, for which Devonshire was celebrated.
Appendix A third and last expedition was fitted out and sailed in May 1587, in which, if our Exeter Merchants冒险, there is no record of the fact: that it was proposed to and considered by them appears from the following minutes:—

“16th Dec. 1587. Also at the same Courte there was reade a coppie of certaine articles under divers of the Companies handes concerninge a newe adventure with Mr. Adrian Gilberete and Mr. John Davyes to China and Cathay, whereupon Mr. Governo’ did move the whole Companie what they intended to do therein, and praised there resolute answere, who agreed that Mr. Nicholas Martyn, Mr. Nicholas Spicer, Mr. Sampforde, Mr. Hackwell and Mr. Jasper Horssey, shall consider of all the accompltes of the voyage heretofore made by the said Adrian Gilbte and John Davies, and shall also set downe what they think fit to be answered to the said articles with as much speade as conveyently they maie, which said articles and lres were by Mr. Governo’ delivered to Mr. Sampforde in open Courte.”

“15 Feb. 1588. It is ordered by the companie then presente, that Mr. Nicholas Spicer, John Hackwill, Richard Dorchester, and Jasper Horssey should deale with Mr. William Martyn for the examination of the accompltes of the last voyage in the Marmaire to China, and that the same be brought in orderly made at the next courte; and also to enquire of a ballet of cloth reported to be missinge, that restitucion maie be made unto every adventurer accordinge to the p'porcon of the same.”

The traces of Davis are still to be found in the map of North America by the local names which he gave to the various places he discovered. On sighting first the land, he named the bay which he entered after his friend, Gilbert Sound; we find, also, Exeter Sound, Totnes Roads, Mount Raleigh, and other familiar titles. A few years later, John Davis found the right course to India and China, and introduced the trade from this county which exists to the present time.
Appendix. There is another name, a household word with Devonians, concerning which we have some little information. Scant though it be, every scrap relating to Sir Humphrey Gilbert is of interest and ought to be preserved.

These records reveal to us information of a melancholy interest; they show the confidence our merchants had in the great Sir Humfrye Gilbert; they contain a warning which he would have done well to have heeded, and though rightly mistrusting the prudence of the adventure, they would not withhold assistance. History tells us what important results arose from this expedition, and history tells us the pathetic story of the disasters
GILBERT AND DRAKE.

Appendix which overtook it; how in the little craft, 'The Squirrel,' of only ten tons, the great general resolved to make his way home; how his officers did all in their power to persuade him to enter the larger vessel, the 'Golden Hind,' and his reply "that he would never desert the bark nor the crew with whom he had encountered so many dangers;" and how on the ninth of September in the evening, in the midst of a great tempest, Sir Humphrey was seen sitting in the stern of his ship with his book, and was often heard by the crew of the 'Hind' to say with a loud voice, "Courage, my lads! we are as near heaven at sea as by land." How about midnight the little ship went down and was no more seen; and so perished as noble, gallant, and beloved a gentleman as any who lived in those times, prolific in great characters.

There are two letters read to the court from Sir Francis Drake—it is a pity they are not copied verbatim—touching the Quixotic expedition to take Portugal from the Spaniards, and set the exiled king on the throne. The minutes of October 1588, and February 1589 merely record the reading of the letters, and the absence of any comment upon them is significant of what our merchants thought of the adventure.

"30 Oct. 1588. At this Courte ther was reade a lre dyrected from Sr Fraunces Drake, knyght, to the gentilmen Merchautes and inhabitauntes of this citty to adventure with him and one Sr John Norris in a voyiage supportinge some speciall service for her Matie for the defence of o' religion, Quene and countrye, dated the 17th October, 1588; together with the order and manner of a warrant for suche as will adventure howe they shalbe assured of suche monyes as they shall adventure, dated the 18th of October 1588."

"31st Feb. 1589. At this Courte ther was one other lre directed from S' Ffraunces Drake, Knight, to the Maior and Aldermen of the Cittie of Exon, touchinge an adventure with Appendix. Elizebeth and others in a voyage for her Maties service, dated the — of January 1588 (o.s.) 1589.

In these days of unrestricted intercourse with other nations we can scarcely realize a state of affairs, which would render it almost impossible to obtain corn, wherewith to make bread, at any price. That this was the case may be learned from contemporary documents. In Philip Wyott's diary, before alluded to, we find that in 1586 Justices sat and gave direction that no corn should go abroad but be kept for the maintenance of the poor in every parish, and that persons should be appointed "to view barnes and mows and to take a note what store of corn there was, and what people were in such houses as had corre to spare, and allowing evy pson a peck a weke to certify the overplus to the said Justices." Wheat at this time was eight shillings, rye six shillings, and barley five shillings and eight pence a bushel.

From a minute in March 1586, it appears that the Company had sent for a cargo of corn from some foreign port for the relief of the city; but a month later, so great had the scarcity become, it was necessary to see to themselves as well as the poor, and they resolved that every subscriber of one pound should have a bushel of wheat and a bushel of rye towards the redemption of his contribution.

XLIV. Another decade brought with it a recurrence of famine. In 1596, still indebted to Philip Wyott's diary for the information, we find that "all this May hath not been a dry day or night." Again in June and in August there is the chronicle of "continual rains," and later on, "not a dry day in November." It says something for the foresight of our Merchants that, in August of this year, considering that "corne was like to growe dearer rather than better cheape by meanes of the frowle weather," they should seek to import from foreign countries the precious grain which their own land would, to appearances, fail to yield them.
Nos. 19 and 20, North Street.
Appendix. The mode of administering relief to the citizens and the poor was ingenious, and is worthy of note. Rye at that time was selling, as a favor, at nine shillings the bushel. The cargo was purchased at the rate of four shillings and sixpence a bushel. One third of the amount disbursed by a Member of the Company was delivered to him in kind, for his own use or to make what he could of it, the remaining two-thirds in value was sold to poor householders and the poor at the cost price.

In the early spring of the following year, the prospects became worse, continued rains prevented both the sowing and the gathering of the wheat. So soon as February 1597, energetic action was taken by the Company to prevent a great calamity. The noble sum of £550 was, without hesitation, subscribed in order to provide the city with the first necessary of life; and the advantage of thus taking early steps to insure a supply of corn is evidenced in the fact that they were enabled to sell it at 5s 8d a bushel, when the market price was more than double.

That the Company were regarded, not merely as a trading body, but as representatives of the social life of the city, is shown by the circumstance that three widows subscribed handsomely towards this fund.

There are other instances of the charitable disposition of the Company which may fitly be introduced here. The petition of Philipp Cane is a well written and manly appeal for help under adverse circumstances, and the response indicates that the case was deserving of consideration.

In our local history there is an account given of the "Black Assize" which was held in the spring of 1586. It was so called from the fearful mortality which followed the trial of certain prisoners who brought the gaol fever into Court, and of those who were present, ten magistrates, eleven jurymen, and a great number of constables and others fell victims to this terribly contagious disease. The fever was generated by certain prisoners Appendix who were taken from a Portuguese ship, homeward bound from Newfoundland with fish, by Barnard Drake, Esquire, and who were maintained in a most miserable condition in the gaol. This gentleman is described in the historical record of his death as Sir Barnard Drake, Knt., and as he was a magistrate present at the trial, and one of the first to succumb to the fever, it almost appears like a retribution, which would have been intensified if he obtained his knighthood, as is not improbable, for this very exploit.¹

The attention of the Company was directed to the case of these unfortunate prisoners some time previously, and their necessities relieved.

In the year 1593 the front of the Guildhall was rebuilt, and behind the portico—on the site occupied by the present police offices—an open room or corridor was constructed. Towards the expense of this work our Company contributed forty pounds for "paving, seelinge, stoves and winscott."

This corridor, we learn from a side note, was used as a "walke;" and we can imagine the stately old Merchants in starched ruff, doublet and hose, refreshing themselves at the close of day with promenade and social gossip; whilst the strains of music proceeding from the cool and airy situation of the "leddes of the Guildhalde" would show that they were not indifferent to the softer arts.

"13 Dec. 1593. At this Courte Mr. Governo' did move the whole Companie concerninge a yearly fee to be geven frome hensforthe to the waites of this Cittie, whereunto the whole Companie agreed. And thereupon Mr. Governo' did put it to triall of handes whether they shoulde have yearly a xxvjs viijd or a xls, whereupon the whole Companie agreed, that they should have yearly forty shillings at the pleasure of this Companie, the firste payment to begynne at the feaste of the Birthe of o’ Lorde God next ensewinge, and to be paid yearly by the Treasurer of this Companie for the tyme beinge. And in consideracon thereof the said waites do promis to plaie evrye sundaie and holy daie betvvene the feaste of Saincte Michaell tharchangell and the feaste of thannunciacon of o’ Ladie beinge in the wynter one quarter of an hower before supper tyme uppon the leddes of the Guilhalde, and betwene the said feaste of thannunciacon and the feaste of St. Michaell beinge in the somer tyme halfe of an hower.”

“6 Sept. 1597. At this Courte it is agreed that from hens-fourthe there shalbe paid yearlie by our Tresorer to Medlandes boy beinge one of the waits, tenne shillinges to thende that he and the reste shall amend there musicke and continewe the time in playenge uppon the leddes of the Guilhalde as in a former Act is mencioned.”

So early as the year 1580, the attention of the Company was directed to the desirability of appointing a public preacher and religious instructor, and they were invited to support the Mayor by contributing something towards a stipend for a functionary to be instituted for those purposes, but nothing seems to have been done on that occasion. In 1599, the subject was again brought up by the Governor of the Company, and a motion was carried that ten pounds a year should be paid as a contribution for and “towards the restablishinge of the Catachisme and procuringe of a learned preacher within this Citie the better to instruct the people in the knowledge of God.” Some disagreement as to the mode of raising the money delayed the appointment for more than twelve months, when the Corporation and the Company agreed to the appointment of the Rev. Edmond Snape, D.D., to the office, at a salary of £50 a year.

Among the municipal records is the following document:—
Appendix. “21 August 1600. The Chamber to Edmond Snape counterpart of appointment as a preacher in Exeter, to preach twice a week, viz., on the Sabbath day at 6 a.m., and in the afternoon, with a salary of £50.”

“Signed Edmond Snape.”

Seal: a death’s head, hour glass and book, with initials E.S.

In Fuller’s “Worthies” on the subject ‘Cotton,’ temp. 1599, the following curious note occurs:—

“Mr. Snape a second Cartwright (not for abilities but activity) came out of Jersey, and plentifully sowed the seeds of Non-conformity in his Diocesse, which the vigilancy of this stout and prudent Prelate plucked up by the roots, before they could come to perfection.”

Can it be possible that the public preacher and this Non-conformist were one and the same person?

The remaining few extracts are arranged in chronological order. The resolution respecting the apprentice, Richard Newman, is illustrative of the interest taken by the Guild in those who would, in good time, become members, and whose education consequently was a matter of some importance.

The order that dilatory arbitrators should be fined, arose out of a reluctance on the part of certain gentlemen to decide in a case where John Davy (who was a man of no small consequence) had been presented for calling John Twose “drunken beast, which are onseemlie wordes.” The gentle pressure of a fine probably had the effect of compelling the appointed to carry out a disagreeable duty. The next extract is a proclamation against the wearing of sumptuous apparel, aimed not so much at the extravagance and immoral tendency of the practice, as against purchasing the fine goods of the hateful foreigner, to the neglect of our own more homely, if more useful fabrics.

“Merchauntes who do dwell in villages or uplandish townes” would have this advantage over their brethren in cities, in that The Broad Gate (Interior).
Appendix they could do pretty much as they liked, without fear of the intertervention of the Guild, in those days of restricted intercourse. Hence the desire to prevent young adventurers from starting in life, on their own account, free from the wholesome restrictions which they would be subject to under the eye of the Guild. An attempt to infringe upon the liberties of the Company by some Merchants of Taunton appears to have resulted in failure, and entailed a liability, in respect of the expenses consequent upon resenting the offence.

Probably one of the first exercising the calling of a broker was appointed by the Company in 1593, but it could not have been a very profitable office, as his commission was but two pence in the pound, and that he was to divide, if another broker came upon the scene on the opposite side.

During the same year one Robert Petter, feltmaker, was discovered to be doing a little contraband business in “Whitware” from Pampoo, having contrived to bring home five or six yards in the “Pleasure” of Topsham. The next year getting bold by success, he brought home fourteen yards and a half in the “Mary of Jarsey.” This was too much for the feelings of the Guild, so he was speedily called to account, and suffered for his offences.

A case of shuffling, as to the ownership of certain goods upon which a distress appears to have been levied, was thoroughly sifted in the matter of William Tucker, who occasioned some trouble and expense, but ultimately got the worst of it.

The refusal of Thomas Chaffe to submit to the formalities usual in the admission to the Guild, for conscience sake, is curious, but the excuse alleged is so “firyvolous” that there was probably some other motive lurking beneath, which might have been suspected by the Court, and acted upon accordingly.

Spanish, at the close of the century, is shown in the minutes relating to the Dunkirks. From the port of Dunkirk a band of free rovers hailed, who, taking advantage of the troublous times, infested the coasts, and under cover of letters of mark (not infrequently forged) committed sad depredations upon peaceful merchantmen.

In 1602, when the siege of Ostend fully occupied the attention of the Spaniards, whose ships would be constantly passing up and down channel, there is some complaint of negligence on the part of the guardships. Probably the Captains were more intent on the larger prey offered in the Spanish vessels, and allowed the little rovers opportunities which they would not be slow to seize. After fitting out the "Katherine" on their own account with gunpowder and "furniture," the Merchants sent a deputation to the Secretary to the Admiralty at Plymouth, with authority to secure his good will and "frendshippe" by an expenditure of twenty pounds, or more if necessary, the object being to get more competent captains to command the warships. Two names are suggested for appointment, the Mayor of Plymouth and the famous Captain Sonds.

Towards the latter part of the century there was a great accession of members, as many as ten being admitted at one Court; the advantages derivable from the connexion during this prosperous period, no doubt inducing many to abandon their own professions and join the more lucrative one of "Merchaundize." The regulations for admission in all cases were stringently enforced, both with those who claimed entrance by right, and those who like Mr. Newcombe found difficulties and a heavy fee in the way. It was a good stroke of policy on his part to obtain a letter of recommendation from Mr. Canon Leach, who (as he doubtless knew) was a favorite with the Merchants. Mr. Roberts tells us that "about 1610 the Chamber of Exeter used to vote sugar-loaves to Mr. Canon Bodley and Mr. Canon Leach, in token of their approbation of their pains taken in the morning lecture at St. Peter's."

These notes will be appropriately brought to a conclusion with the Treasurer's balance-sheet. It is dated early in the history of the Guild, and singularly enough is the only one to be met with throughout the minutes. The cash accounts, however, of so important a corporation, as it grew in strength, would be kept in a separate book.

I.

The Oration or Declaration which I, John Vowell al's Hoker, made by the appoyntment of Mr. Robert Mydwynter Maior unto the Comons of the Citie of Exon at the Guildhall the xxvth of Januarie 1559.

"My Masters, the cause why yo are called hether at these presents is to notific unto yo the tenner of certeyne Ires and a decree which the Queenes Maties most honorable Council hath sent unto o Masters Mr. Maior and his brethren, as touching an order by their honors taken for thapeasinge of the late controversie among us: most hartely pyenge us all quietly and paciently to geve eare thereunto: The effecte of them consysteth in too poyntes—thone concerninge obedience and thother touching concorde and unitye, which too are of suche force and effycacie, that therby all comonwelthes and all estates are preserved and kept, and without them all are turned to utter ruyn and desolacion, whereof to declare pticularly it may aper by many and sundrie examples how that thobedience of the people hath not onelie bene moste acceptable before God, but hath also bene the most assured staye and preservacion of them in all ages and tymes. Whereas controverslye disobedience moste displeaseth God and procureth his heavie hande againe us: yea and so hainest and displeasinge is the same in his sight that even from the fyrst begyning he opened it when he showed his hevie displeasure in revenging thereof. Ffor when Adam was fyrst made and created and apoynted the Lorde and Governo' of all the workes of God, which were all made to serve his use, God wylld him that in no wyse he sholde touche or eate of the aple of the tree of lyffe and deth e which then dyd growe in the middle of the garden of Paradise: but Adam forgetting his deutyce wolde needs taste and eate therof: the smarte whereof he forthwh felte and not he alone but all his posteritie all beinge exiled out of that garden: and man wolde thinke it but a smale mater to taste or eate of an aple speciallie the same beinge made for manne and whereof was such abundance and plentie as a mannes seeing the lacke of one coulde not be so greate a mater: Yet God who requireth not so moche of us obedience as doth abhorr disobedience doth not onely exile Adam and Eva his wyffe but all his posteritie out from the garden of innocencie wh wee all do yet at these presente feele—lykewyse the children of Israel when they forgetinge there obedience dyd murmur agayn Moyses and Aaron because they had not fleshe to eate in the wilderness as they were wonte to have in Egipt all-though God gave them there own desyres and rayned downe from heaven bothe, quayles and manna, yet let he not unrevenged ne yet unplayned there former disobedience but even whyles the meate was yet in there mouthes his countenance was moved agayn them and slew them wh an exceding great plague.
Also Corathe Dathan and Abyron were miche offended wh Moyses and Aaron and repyned against them, but what folowed even they when they thought to offer incense to God he nothing accepting the same the earthe opened and swalowed up bothe theyme there houses and all the people that were with them: yea and as the historic saieth they all went downe alyve in to hell.

Absolon also Kinge Davids sone who was right deere unto his father and who coulde wante nothinge yeat wheyn he gave to mislyke the Government of his and wolde needes be Kinge him selfe and rule after his owne mynde it do so move and displease God that he rooted him out from of the face of the earthe, for Absolon riding upon his horse under an oke was hanged by the heare of his hedde and there dyd so hange untill one Joab came and slew him. Many other examples there be both in the sacred as also in the prophane histories, as especiallie in the chronicles of this realme, wch may well shew unto us the frute of contempte and disobedience of the higher powers, whereof some have been seen even by many now yet alive and here present beinge the same done as well in the tymes of Kinge Henry the vijth, Henry the viijth, Edward the vijth, as also in the tyme of Queene Marie. Ffor when certeyn men, mislyking the Government of Kinge Henry the viijth dyd cluster themselves together, and under the guydinge of one called the blackesmithe, came from the mounte to this Citie and from thence to London, and then to Blackheth the felde redy wh force to prevayle wh the Kinge: What followed byside the shedinge of bloodd? The plague was upon them and there posteritie.

Lykewise when in the tyme of King Henry the viijth certeyn of the northe countrie myslyked the affayres and doinges of the Kynge and dyd congregate themselves to repyne his attemptes, even, as it was thought, of a verie zeale and love to God, yet it is well known what a plague and what an evell successe folowed the same.

In the tyme of Kinge Edward the viijth the vulgare people and comones of these west countries having, as they saide, a zeale in goode cause, could not abyde the reformacon of the prince in causes of religion: Wherefor they clustered themselves together, chose to themselves certeyn captaynes and lay here about this Citie as yo know a long tyme. But alas in thende thereof how was there bloode spylt, there goodes wasted, and both they and there posteritie brought to utter reproche, confusion and shame. And fynallye, now of late in the tyme of Queene Marye it is not unknown how Sr Thomas Wyat, even of a verie zeale to defend the nacion and to preserve it the libertie thereof from the overuning of the strange nacions, dyd arysye in defense thereof: but alas yo know what an evell successe God gave thereunto, and how the plague lighted upon him to the confusion of him selfe and reproche of his posteritie. Ffor assuredlie such is the displeasure of God agayn suche as shall repyne the prime magistrate and higher powres, that be the cause never so good in our sighte, yet before God it is so displeasant that he will not leave it unpunished: the cause he taketh to be his owne, and therefore upon him selfe taketh he the revenge thereof: the state of higher powres is as deere unto him as the aple of his eye which nowise will he to be touched.

Wherefore let us all well remember, as well for the dewtie we owe unto God, the obedience unto the prince and love to this our Comon welthe and Citie that wh all humbleness and obedience wee do quietlie submitt our selfs to the Government of the higher powres and magistrates.

And as I have thus spoken of obedience, so think ye the same of concord, love and unitie; for without it be the blessinge of God otherwise never so great and manyfolde unto us yet shall not the same availe us but rather rebounde to o' confusion, for suche is the nature of love and concorde that by it smale and weake things become to be greate, mightie and stronge, and of the contrarie by discorde and division most puissant and strong matters have become feble and weke and of no force nor effecte.

Ffor wheresoever love, concorde and unitie are not there is all disorder and confusion. Esop therefore hathe a fable that one a tyme there was a contention between the bodie and the membres of the same,—the membres forgeating in what a unitie they were knitt unto the bodie begane to murmur and grudge, the hande refusing to do his function, the foote being were to do his vocation: and finally everie membre for getting in what an unitie he was compacte and joyned in the bodie, swerved from doinge his dewtie and part. Thus the bodic beinge divided everie one membre having smale regarde of thother were at length brought to suche a feeble and extreme state that they awayted for nothinge but even the utter decaye and confusion of them selves wh indeed folowed, even so shall it be by us: for when everie singuler membre envieng the state of the bodie will of any singuler fantasie swerve from that unitie we are all conjoined in lett him awayte most assuredlie for destruction. Ffor as he beinge knytt and joyned to the bodye shall seele his owne preservacion and contynuance so beinge severed shall as a member without sustenance be brought to confusion and decaye.

Ffor concord and unitie preserveth and kepeth whereas discord and division destroicthe and subvertethe. Wherefore one Scyturus a Scythian borne beinge one stycken in yeres and having xxx sones alyve to pswade them to a concorde love and unitie amonge them selves used this familiier example: he caused a lytle before his dethe a fagott to be made of so many styckes as he had children and the same being sett before him he called all his sones before him and commanded theldest to take the fagott and to break it, wh when he coulde not do, then he willed the seconde to do it and then the iij and so finallie averie one one after another: and when none of them could breake the fagott he willed the eldest sone to take out a stycke and breake it wch when he had done he willed the seconde to do so and so from one to another the lyke he commanded. Wch when everie one of them had done and broken hys stycke then thus he saide unto them: even thus shall it be wh yo' for as long as ye shall contynnew together within the compasse and bonde of love and unitie ye shall be strong and invincible: but if any one of yo fleece and swerve from a nother and be ones out of the fagott and be at variance discorde and contention then shall yo' be weake feble and easie to be broken and overthrown which his sayeinge is not so wise as most trew: for it is a rule among the Philosophers "omnis virtus unita magis in se valet quam dispersa." Everie thinge wch hathe any vertewe is of muche more force and effecte when it is ioyned together in one, than when it is dispersed and devyded: wch to be most trew hathe apered by many examples in the comon welthe of this o' Citie: who when we have ioyned together in one hert, one mynde and one bodye have ben of suche force as agayne whom our adversaries and enemies have but smalle prevayled for in the xlvth yere after the incarnacion of Christ wch were about xxiiiij yeres before the destruction of Jerusalem Claudius the empero' sent Vespasian then Duke of his armye in to this realme and here being with a mighty host besieged this Citie whose puysance and might thoughe could not be withstanden by so smale a company as in respecte of his were within the Citie yet dyd the inhabitants so ioyne themselves together in one herte and one mynde with such a fyrme concorde and unitie that thempero' being not hable to prevayle was enforced to rayse his sege yea and as some saye fayne to take the seas for his succo'.

Lykewyse in the tyme of King Edwarde the iiiijth thoughe it be storie to all men not knowne yet treu it is that sundry of the nobilitie of this realme taking parte wh King Edwarde lay and harbored within this Citie: others of the nobilitie then bearing and taking parte wh Kinge Henry the vijth nothing pleased therewith assembled themselves together and with an army besieged this Citie: at wh tyme the Citizens were in greate perplexities the nobilitie who were within requiring to have the keyes of the Citie in their custodie and to have the government Q° of the Citie, and the nobylitie lykewise wch were without by force seekinge to prevale, but in this extremitie the Citizens joined them selfes so fyrmly in unitie and concorde together that as they gave no place nether graunted to ether pt, so dyd they preserve the Citie from daunger and invasion. And finally last of all wee wch are here now present do well know in what a miserable state this Citie and we o' selfes were in at the last comocion beinge one everie syde environed with our enemies: and yet being fyrmely ioyned together in unitie and concorde dyd prevale agayne them, ffor certeingly such is the force and nature of love and unitie as whereby all things are preserved and contynewed even as by division contencion and discorde cometh utter confusion and desolacion. There hath of late benne a controversie and variaunce amonge us wch hath bredd miche unquietness: the same hath bene opened and referred to the honorable o' good Lordes of the Queene's Maties Councell: who tendering the state of us and of o' comon welthe have wh no smale paynes travelled to reduce the same to a quiett and finall determinacion, and lykewise they have of ther honores sent the same to o' master the maior and his brethren here present wh there lres, requiring us all wh quietness to obey and observe the same. They shalbe therefore openlie playnelie and distynctlie redde unto yo' praienge yo' to geve attente eare thereunto and to beare it well awaic.

And then I toke the lres and fyrst I dyd reede them playnlie and distynctlie, that done I dyd reede everie sentence by sentence repetig everie one once or twice: that done I tooke thorder and when I had redden it once over I saide this—

My masters ye knowe the controversie amonge us was cheeflye for ij causes thone touching buyinge and sellinge of marchandyse by retayle, and thother for adventuring beyonde the seas. For the fyrst the wisedome of the honorable Councell waye-inge and consyderinge o' estate, have not thought good the lybertie of buyeinge and sellinge by retayle sholde be restrayned from any maner of citzeen or inhabitant within this citie of what condicion or degree he be of: but to have his free lybertie and choyse to use the same at his owne will and pleasure without lett or deneall: And for the seconde arle marke there honorable wisedomes who lyke fathers of this oure comon welthe have a

speciall regarde unto us—for asramiche to be an adventurier is not onlie to be subjecte to the perilles of the seas, but do the also require a more exacte knowledge in it selfe then other trades dothe without whch the trade is lyke to be more daungerose then profytable, therefore there honores thinkinge not good that everie unskillfull pson sholde attempte this trade wch is more lyke to turne to his decaye then commoditie will not that any sholde attempte the trade of suche adventuringe oneles he were first skillfull therein for if any one having not skill sholde by adventuringe receve the loss the same shall not onelie be the decay of him, his wyfie his familie and his freendes but a losse to the comon welthe, he being not able to be so frutfull a member therein as he before was. There wisedomes therefore having so fatherlye a care of us wolde not wee sholde attempte the thinge wch might turne us to decaye or ruyn. And yet notwithstanding there honores exclude not everie pson from adventuring but onelie suche as are unsytt or unapte but if any wilbe an adventurier lett him sewe to be of this companye who if he be discerned and judged to be fytt for the same he shall not onelie be admitted thereunto but shall also be receved into the same Companie gratis freeli without any chardge or coste at all. And because a reasonable meane sholde be hadd in chosing and electinge of suche as be fytt, this order is taken that the Maior the Aldermen and Comon Councell of this Citie ioyning to them ten of the hedd and cheffe comoners who knowe the state of everie inhabiytant within this Citie shall examyn and judge whether everiepse on so seweng to be a Marchant Adventurer be fytt and meete for the same or not according to which order the saide tenne comoners be elected and chosen whose names be these (which I then rehearsed and said thus) : This is the order and therefore I py ye to marcke it well, I will reede it agayne once more unto yo' (and then I dyd so and thus I sayd) forasmuch as the Queene's Maties most honorable Councell hath wh greate paynes and travelle sett and made this order it is not onelie o' bownden dewtie to receve and accepte it but also with all humbleness of hert in quiet concorde and unitie we oughte to obey the same conforming o' selves in all quiet order to th' accomplishing thereof. And our Master the Maior and all his brethren do here before yo' all not onelie for there partes promise to obey the same but also do desyre yo' to do the lyke: And that all matters of displeasure variaunce and contencion sett apart now freendly to agree all together in all love concorde and unite wh for there partes do both crave and desire of yo' offering to ioyne wh yo' wh all love and unitie. And according to thorder taken as requisitt it is they offer here that no inhabitante at all within this Citie shalbe interrupted from retaylinge of any kinde of wares and mchanndize, nether yet will refuse any man to be of the Societie of the M'chauntes but being ones judged meete shalbe receved wh hert and mynde gratis freelie without any cost or charge at all: but yet understande yo' too thinges as and shalbe required of everie one admitted in to this companye without wh he cannot be receved: that is to saie obedience to the Masters and Governors of this Company, and love and unitie one wth another for without these too he cannot be receved: Wherefore Masters as I do nothing doubtte so do I trust yo' will conforme yourselves quietlie to this order: wh I do require of yo' both for the dewtie yo' owe unto God the obedience to the higher powers and regarde of this our comon welthe: I mistrust not but that yo' will conforme yorselves wh all quietness and obedeynce to observe the same: sfor God commaundeth it, the prynte and higher powers require it and the state of o' comon welthe loketh for it (wh ar and sholde be sufficient arguments for everie man to quiet and content himselfe) yea and if there were ells nothing to move us unto it yet o' verie Citie and situacion of the same might sufficiently teache us what to do: sfor as ye know it is placed and situated upon an hill beinge above the whoale countrie adioyning: wh teache the o' conversacion o' love our concorde and unitie amonge o' selves sholde be suche as that it sholde be a spectacle to the whole countrie adioyning to beholde: it is walled roundeabout wh lyme and stone, even sholde we fast ioyned one to another wh the hoate lyme of love and unitie and wh the sande of obedience wh shall better defend us then any wal of stone be it never so stronge. And therefore as it now cometh to my remembraunce when certyn ambassadores were sent from Athenes to Lacedemonia they vewinge the Citie asked where the walles were of the Citie: wherewh certyn of the citezens stepping forthe and ioyning themselves together awnsered we ar the walls of Sparta, meaning that they so agreed together in obeyinge the higher powers and such love and unitie one wh another that no enemy was able to prevayle agayne them and that no walle could be stronger then were they beinge thus ioyned in love quietnes and obedience. The sone assone as he ariseth casteth his heate and beames of light upon us, even so sholde we evry the morning spredd the heate and beames of unfayned love and unitie upon all o’ neighbores: lykwise one shouwre of rayne wassheth awaye the fylthe of all o’ streetes even so sholde the dewe and love of unitie washe awaye from us all contemtes all hatredes and all displeasures that nothinge be so plentifulie remayninge amonge us as love peace and unitie. Whereby be we assured we shall most saefflie kepe and defende this our comon welthe and best prvide for our selves and our posteritie. And therefore yet once more I do most hartelie pray yea and require yo’all in the name of God in the name of the Prince and higher powers and in the name of the comon welth the pservacion whereof we all must tender that everie one of us do quietly conforme and aplie our-selves to thobeying and kepings of thorder now taken: And if it be so that any psons not contented to do his dewtie shall travell by any maner of waies to pswade yo’ to the contrarie or whisper in corners any vayne thinge whch might withdrawe yo’ from this trew unitie love and obedience believ him not nether yet geve eare unto him: For he is therein a most unprofyttable member in the comon wethe: but rather if yo’ will do well disclose and reveale him to the magistrat that according to his desertes he may receive a condigne punishment. And let us all as our deuties are castawaye from us all discorde division and discension, and lett us as brothers agree all together in love concorde and unitie. And as God shalbe so prayed the prince reioysed and o’ Citie preserved so doubte I not but the pros-peritie thereof shalbe bothe upon this Citie and upon us and o’ posteritie which the Lorde graunte unto us all.

1573 John Crosse to collect "averedge" money, and to have for his pains xijd of everie pounde.

In 1587 It was £17 10s (farmed out for this) the amount of levy being double—2d instead of 1d.

"The spirit of adventure does not appear to be confined to legitimate trading; for at the Court held on 9th September, 1568, it was agreed to take shares or lottes in the "Allottarie," and 64 members subscribed for 96 shares, "to be divided into three several posies," to be written in the name of the Company, and any advantage gained to be divided proportionately amongst the subscribers.

Nicholas Martyn, John Livermore, and Richarde Swete, are appointed to carry out the arrangements, and they bind themselves, their heirs and assigns, to faithfully perform their duties.
They chose respectively 32 numbers, running consecutively from 176916 to 177011. The “posie” or motto of Nicholas Martyn savours of a spirit of pious faith:

"Cast the Grapell over the boate
If God will for the greate lotte."

That of John Livermore betokens somewhat of a hopeful turn of mind, and the absence of any pious aspiration, coupled with the fact that he was twice fined “for that he did spake onseemlie and unhonest wordes," may justify the inference that he was rather a loose fish. His motto is—

"The Castell standing upon the whaves of the see We truste shall caruye some lottes awaye."

Richard Swete is evidently not a lucky man, but he knows how to take care of what he gets. His motto is—

"If God doo sende any goode fortune at laste
The lyons pawe will holde it faste."

In all three posies there is allusion to the arms of the Company, which were “A castell standinge in the poinet wave ij crownes in cheifif gold upon the helme on a torse gold and azure, A lyons paw gulz holding a grappell golde the cordes gulz mantelyd gulz Dobled argent.”

"Memorandu 25 August 1585. The Companie being assembled in the Merchautes haule Mr. John Peryam o' newe Governo' elected did appere: And being moved to take his othe of Governor accordinge to oure ordinaunces in that behalfe, answered that he woulde not take uppon hime to be Governo', nor take anie othe to prosecute the said office: for that as he alledged he did not minde to remayne in this Cittie as an inhabitant, but to dwell at London where his howsholde doth nowe remayne, and shewing other cause that he must nedes be absent from this Cittie for the space of this yere or more, praised the Companie to ellecte some other in his stede: Whereupon the generallitie acceptinge and allowinge of his excuse did dispense with him for this time, And thereupon did order that ther shalbe chosen an other Governo' &c."

[In 1587. John Periam was again elected Governor, and he being absent, two of the Company were ordered to repair to him and require his direct answer, whether he will take the office or pay the fine.]

[17th August. At the next Court he took the oath upon "certaine condicons and protestations which were by him then published and declared." ]

VIII.

"1st June 1581. At this Courte Leonarde Thordon servant to Mr. William Hurst of Exeter Esquier: came in and requested to be made ffree of this Companye by redempcion, and the generallitie knowing that his saide master is no ffreeman of the Companye, thought it not convenient that any his sarvantes shoulde be admitted. Yet not withstanding the Company weyinge the estate of the young man: at the last dyd agree by handes that he shoulde be admytted upon some reasonable fyne so they did put downe two prises, viz. iijl and vl which was put to be judged by handes. So the Companye dyd agree that hee shall paye for his saide ffreedome: vl to which the saide Leonarde woulde not agree. Yet nevertheless hee had choisse and tyme geven hym untill Michaelmas next to respit upon the matter."

clothes And whereas also the said Governo' and sundrye of this Companie assembled together agreed that a rate shoulde be set downe by Mr. Nicholas Martyn, Mr. John Davye, Walter Burroughs and Jasper Horssey for lendinge of a cvl xiijs iiijd only. for this Companie by sundrys of this Companie for and towards the payment of the said some cvl xiijs iiijd which rate being exhibited and brought in: it is therefore agreed that evrye persone and persons being rated as aforesaide shall paie suche some and some of money as is uppon them rated and set downe within sixe daies next ensewingne, and that Mr. John Hackwill shall collecte the same within eight daies then next followinge. And evrye persone rated as aforesaied shalbe allowed of the said severall somes disbursed after the rate of xiijd the clothe that shalbe transported oute of the porte of Exon. And further the said Mr. William Martyn doth promis to satisfie evrye persone that hath disbursed the monyes ther severall somes within three yeares next ensewingne if the same be not allowed or paied in the meane seison And further it is agreed that the collectors of Exeter, Dartmouth, Tottenes, Lyme, and Barnstaple shalbe accomptable to the said Mr. William Martyn Maio' for suche monies as they shall receave, And that the Tresorer and Consulls of this Companie for the tyme beinge shall evrye halfe yeare receave accompt of the said Mr. William Martyn Maio' for suche monies as he shall receave of the Porte aforesaied, And to certifie the howse at the Courte followinge.”

[Sixty-five members rated in various sums from £3 to 5s.]

“14 Feb. 1593. Whereof an acte for a rate to be made amongst this Companie of a vil xiijs iiijd for and towards the payment of certaine monies disbursed by Mr. Willm Martyn in a certaine suite for mitt gatinge of custome upon wollen clothes which saide suite was followed by o’ Governo’ Mr. Sampforde the saide Willm Martyn accordinge to the said acte did at this presente court exhibit his accompt to this Companie and in full discharge thereof paid to the Tresorer of this Companie a xvjd ijs vjd with a iiijd xs vjd which the Tresorer had receaved of the said accompt wh is as muche as is restinge into certaine of the Companie which lente their monies. The rest was allowed unto them by xijd the cloth at the Custome House. And by a taxacion which was made amongst this Companie for the full discharge of the said accompt. And so the said Willm Martyn by the consent of the whole Companie ys discharged of his promis made and agreed uppon in the saide Acte."

X.

"6 August 1597. Fforasmuch as John Martin inhabitante of the Citie of Exon and one of the Attornies of Her Maties Common Pleas hath well deserved of the Companie of Mar-chauntes within the saide Cittie tradinge ffraunce, in followinge there suite in lawe: And hath also made request to be admitted into their Societie and fellowshippe, yt is therefore at this Courte enacted by the Governor Consulls and whole Companie of the Marchauntes aforesaide, that he the saide John Martin for and in consideracion of his peynes taken as aforesaide, as also for the good assistaunces that he will hereafter pforme unto the saide Companie in these like accons,shalbe admitted into the saide Society and fellowshippe of the saide Marchauntes Adventurers without payment of anie fine for the same, anie acte or actes heretofore to the contrarie notwithstandinge, Provided alwaies that the saide John Martyn neither shall nor will by virtue of his saide admissions use exercise or deale by himself or anie other in the trade of marchaundize, either directlie or indirectlie nor that anie sonne or servant of his shall nor will by virtue thereof claime anie freedom or priviledge in the said Companie. And therefore it is farther inacted by the said Governo' Consulls and Companie of Marchauntes aforesaide that he the sayd John Martin shall take an oath at the time of his admission in manner and forme followinge viz:—I do swere that I shalbe good and trewe to our Soveraigne ladie the Queenes highnes Elizabeth by the Grace of God Queene of Englande Ffraunce and Irlande defender of the ffaieath and to her heires and successors Kinges and Queens of Englande.
You shalbe obedient to the Governor and Consulls of this Com-panie of Marchauntes Adventurers tradinge Ffraunce. You shall s mainteine as much as in you shall lie all the libties of the same. Yf anie variaunce or controvery shall at anie time happen to arrise betwene anie your brethren of this Companie you shall putt your helpiing hande for the pacifieng and aswaginge of the same. You shall not disclose the secrete talke commanded by the Governo' and Consulls or anie of them to be kepte secrete which maie be hurtful to the saide Companie. You shall enjoy the libties and freedome of this Companie onelie accordinge to this presente Acte and not otherwise. You shall come to thelection of everie newe Governor and Consulls having no reasonable excuse to the contrarie. All and singuler the premisses you shall well and trulie observe and kepe so helpe you God.”

XI.

“7th June 1571. Whereas the Governo’, Consulls, and Societie have receaved commaundement from Mr. Maio’ that the Company shall ppare as many men armor and furniture as they can, for the shewe of the watche on Mydsomer eve next: Therefore it is agreed at this Courte (holden the vijth of June) by the saide Governo’, Consulls, and Societie. "And it is ordered that this Companye shall provide for everie Calyver 1 pounde of the best corne pouther that maye be gotten and hec that is the setter of hym fourth shall paye vjd. towards the same.

"And further it is ordered that Richard Dorchester and Edward Locke shall goo to the howses of all those which are set to their calyvers and armor to geve theim warning thereof and that they prepare and make readie the saide armor and men by the first daye of August next upon payment of xs."

XIII.

"11th August 1579. Item. It is ordered and agreed That John Sampforde shall receave in the wodd to be provided for the poore this yeare. And hec to have allowed hym ijd. for everie dozen. And hec to discharge one Gyll for his paynes or some other to helpe hym."

"15th April, 1585. Also it is agreed that Mr. Sampforde and Mr. Sweete shall have the woodhowse by the watergate for one yere viz. from the seconde of Maye next ensewing in anno 1585 untill the seconde daie of Maye wch shalbe in anno 1856. And they do promis to paie therefore unto this Company at thende of the said yeare for the rente thereof a vjs. viijd."

XIV.

"6th June 1574. Also it is agreed and enacted that there shalbe paid to the mariners at Topsham for wyndage, as it hath byn heretofore accustomed which is iiijd to everie mariner. And also it is agreed that there shall not be hereafter allowed, nor paid, for any averedge dynner, above the some of xs."
XV.

"15 August 1580. At this Courte it is ordeyned enacted and agreed by the Governor Consulls and whole Companye: that Mr. Philip Yarde, Governo’ the last yeare, shall have xiiij s iiiijd for a Bucke which hee dyd provide for the dynner on the syxt daye of August last: And that everie Governo’ hereafter that doo provide a Bucke to the saide dynner to be kept on the saide syxt daye of August shall have allowed hym also xiiij s iiiijd for same: over and besides his other allowance of fifyve markes.”

XVI.

"14 August 1578. Item it is further ordered and enacted by the Governor Consulls and Companye That everie yeare (one weeke before the syxt daye of August being the election daye) That the Treasourer for the yeare beinge shall paye and deliver unto the Governor for that yeare fifyve markes of lawfull money of Englande, to be bestowed by hym towards a dynner on the election daye as before is mentioned.

“And it is also agreed that the saide Treasourer shall also then paye unto the Governo’ vs to be bestowed towards the Pot to be boyled for the poore prisoners in the Queenes Gayell, on the saide syxt daye of August everie yeare.”

XVII.

"1585, 10 July. ffor that the vjth daie of August being o’ eleccon daie falleth this yeare on a sfridaie the Governo’ moved the Companie to have there opinions whether it were best to kepe the dynner on the saide sfridaie or some other daie being a fleshe daie. So the whole companie did agree to have the said dynner kept on the Mundaie then next following which shalbe the ixth daie of the said moneth of August.”
“3 August 1588. At this Courte Mr. Governo’ did move the whole Companie concerninge certaine sermons and a generall fast that is appointed to be observed and kept at St. Peters o’ Tuesday next being o’ election daie: It is therefore agreed by the whole Companie that no dynner shalbe kept in o’ haule that daie. And that the money collected shalbe employed for and towards the releif of the poore.”

XVIII.

“31 July 1599. At this Courte Mr. Governo’ did move the whole Company that whereas heretofore the dynner and thelleecon day hath been usually kept in the Merchauntes haule and for that our eleccon daie doth fall one a mundaie by reason whereof (Mr. Governo’ beinge Maio’) and havininge occasion to invite others as well as the Companie, It is therefore agreed by the consent of the whole Companie that the said dynner shalbe kepte in his owne howse.”

XIX.

“8 July 1596. At this Courte Mr. Governo’ moved the Companie concerninge the dynner to be kept the vjth daie of August next being Ffridaie and a fishe daie whereupon the whole Companie agreed that there should be no dynner kept, and that the money allowed for that purpose shoulde be imploied in corne and geven to poore householders by the discreacon of Mr. Governo’ and the Stewardes.”

“12th July 1596. Whereas at the laste Courte it was agreed by the Governo’, Consulls and whole Companie that the money which heretofore hath on the ellecon daie ben bestowed on a dynner shoulde be bestowed in corne and geven to poore householders of this Cittie: It is at this present Courte by the Governo' and Consulls referred to the whole Companie whether they shoulde paise there ordinarye quarterledge towards the said dynner or dubbell towards the releiffe of the poore: Whereupon the whole Companie agreed that evrie man shall dubble his quarterledge towards the said dynner and releiffe of the poore and that the saide dynner shalbe kept the thursdaie before the ellecon daie at Mr. Governo' howse and shall have towards his dynner the like porcon the last Governor had. And that viij/ viij s viijd shalbe bestowed in corne and geven to poore householders of the Cittie by the discreacon of Mr. Governo' Jeffrey Waltham and John Chappell Junr., Consulls."

XX.

"14 Jany 1572.—(14th Eliz.) And for that there hath byn of late contencion in brawlinge and fflyghtinge betwene some of this Companie which was presented at the Courte unto the Governo' and Consulls of this Societie: The saide Governo' and Consulls myndinge the quietnesse and brotherlie amytye of this saide whole Companie, and to avoyde and repell the like inconveynience: as farre as in theim lyes: The said Governo' Consulls and whole Companye doo fullie and throughlie agree condiscende and inacte (at this present Courte) That whatsoever hee be, being free of this Company, that doeth hereafter brawle with or geve any mysname, or other unsimlie or unhonest wordes to any other of his brethren, free of this Companye, that everie such parson shall pay to this Societie for suche his nastie wordes and ill behavio' iijs iiiijd. And if any parson free of this Societie, doo fyght with or geve any stroke or blowe, or doo otherwise bodelie hurte any one of his brethren free of this Companye, that every suche parson shall paye to this Societie for suche his ill behavio' the some of vis viijd or more accordinge to the facte, as it shalbe considered of by the saide Governor Consulls and Companie. And furthermore they doo enacte, establishe and ordeyne that whatsoever he be being free of this Societie that shalbe present or in companye at the tyme of such ill demeanure and misusinge of any parson or parsons as aforesaide and doo not present and reveile the same to the said Governo' and Consulls at the next Courte folowinge, That everie suche parson or parsons shall pay to this Companye for hys or their defaulte xijd.'

XXI.

"19th Dec. 1594. "To o' verie loving frenndes Mr. John Hutchyns : and the rest of the Marchaunte adventurers of the Cittie of Exeter.

"After oure verie hartie commendacions etc. Whereas ther groweth the greate discommodities to Cities and townes corporate for that their are dyverse which use the trade of Marchaundise and yet dwele not nether in Citie nor corporate towne dooth greate hynderaunce of the Corporacions through the whole realme whereuppon we have thought it convenient to write unto youe that if youe thinke it goode wee wilbe contente to deale by your advise in joyning with other Cities for the exhibiting of a bill at this presente parliament for the redress thereof if it maye be hade: That none shall use the trade of marchaundize but onelic suche as dwell in cities or townes corporate and if it please you to send any one man of speciall trust wee wilbe contente to sende a nother upon oure owne charges to solycet the same unto youre and oure burgyses by whose diligence possiblie redresse thereof maye be obtayned and further for that the greatest parte of the yarne of this Countie of Devon is imploied into fine kersaies some of them by meanes of fleas falslye made and bad wever are verie falslye wrought to the discredeite and hynderaunce of the sale of kersaies which is the principulest commoditie of o’ countrie and because the greatest parte of the saide kyrsais are solde in youre Citie and thereaboute where wee knowe youe feling the discommoditie of suche unlawful ware doo thinke youe ofoure myndes very willinge to have the same and any other suche disorder if possyblye maye be reformed.
Lykewise wee doo most hartelie desire youe to showe us the ffrendshipp to let us have a coppie of your charter which is graunted unto youe for the trade of sfrance wherein youe shall not onelic pleasure us but shall bynde us to doo the lyke if it lye in us.  And thus referringe all thinges herein to youre con-

“Whereupon it was ordered that a ire shoulede be wretcn to the said Marchauntes of Totnes certifsieg theim oure Companyes mynde herein.  And that they shall have the coppie of the saide charter : paying o’ Clerke for hys paynes for writinge it outhe and also paying our Companye xxxs which they are indebted unto them towards suche money and charges as they have layed oute and paiied to Lytchefelde as tauchinge his late commision."

"10 Sept. 1585. At this Courte the matter was moved to the Companie by the Governo' to have ther opynyons touchinge a graunte from her Matie unto Sir Edward Stafforde Knight newe Lorde Imbassado' in ffraunce for the reformacion of karsaies. And the generalitie uppon the debatinge the matter did thinke it not conveynient to fall to anie agreement with the deputies of the said Sir Edward Stafforde touchinge the same, but to take respecte thereupon and to take into the coppie of the commission to be vewed by some skilfull lawiers at the next sessions to have their advise and opinions therein, And then to geve answere to the said deputies what the Companie will do therein. And it is ordered that the said lawiers shalbe paiied for theire paines by the Tresorer of this Companie.

"And further this Courte being contynewed in the afternoone there did appere John Cadye of Cliffordes Inne and Anthony Bickersteth gent: deputies and factors unto the said Sr Edward Stafforde Knight: And the matter being moved againe as touchinge the said graunte the said deputies demaunded answere what o' Companie would do therein. And forasmoche as owre Companie had not perused the said graunte nor had taken anie councell uppon the same requested some tyme to answere the matter, whereupon the said deputies did geve libertie unto the said Maio' and the said Companie to take advise and respect thereupon untill the seconde daie of November next ensewinge to give an answere unto the deputies at Mr. Glanfeldes chamber in Lyncolns Inne in London: What ende order or composicon the Companie will come unto concerninge the saide graunte: And in the meane tyme the said deputies did agree and gave ther wordes that they nor non other shoulde deale with anye Exeter men touchinge the said karsayes by vertue of the said graunte."

"And in consideracon of which libertie and respect geven: It is ordered that the said deputies shall have geven them by this Companie the some of a iijl vjs. viijd. which is to be paiied them by the Tresorer of this Companie."
"Courte held xixth October 1585.
"Forasmuche as this Companie did promys Mr. John Cadye and Mr. Anthony Bickersteth gent deputies and facto' to the Right wo' Mr. Edward Stafforde knight to geve them answere on the seconde daie of November next (at Mr. Glanfeilde's chamber in Lyncoln's Inne in London) what the Companye will do as touchinge the said Mr. Staffordes graunte for the reformacon of kersaies: which cause the Companye hath considered of and hath ordered that a Ire shalbe written unto the said deputies to geve them to understande the Companys answere and mynde therein and that also Mr. Willm. Martyn nowe at his goinge to London whome the Companye have appointed for that purpose shall certifie the said deputies thereof on the seconde daie of November next which answere is this. That if by the said deputies means there maye be a reformacon of karsaies had accordinge to the statute the Companie will be verie gladd thereof and do wish the said deputies to execute their office as touchinge the same."

"I Feb. 1592: At the same Courte Mr. Governo' did move the whole Companie concerning an acte to be made at the next Parliament for redres in making of kersais for length and weight: Whereupon the whole Companie agreed that Mr. Recorder and Mr. Peryam Burgess for this Cittie shall prosecute the same. And that the charge of this Companie shalbe rated and set downe by the said Burgess whereunto the whole Companie consented and agreed.

"And further it is agree that lres shalbe sent to the Merchauntes of Tottenes Dartmouth and all other places adioyning to thende that one man be sent of purpose to the LL of her maties previe Counsell to thende that licence maie be had to trade to Morlais and Mallos in Brittanie."

"15 April 1595. Also it is agreed that Mr. Henry Hull shalbe a suter for mittigatinge of excessive fices of late taken for sealinge of kersies. And that uppyn obtayning thereof this Companie agree that he shall have towards his paines the same of tenne poundes to be levied by tenne pence the packe, and that he in obtayning thereof shall joyne with the Merchauntes and Clothiers of Tiverton."
XXVI.

"6 August 1589. At this Courte it is ordered that James Boyer for comittinghe of a murder upon one hayman ys by the handes of the whole Companie dismissed and shall have no longer anie gowne."

XXVII.

"6th August 1582. At this Courte it is ordered and enacted by the Governor, Consulls, and generallitie, that the Threasorer of this Societie for the yeare folowing shall provide for this Companye three dozen of lether bucketts, two ladders and two crokes of iron for the helpe of myssfortune of ffer: which charges shalbe laied oute by our saide Threasorer and allowed upon his accompl."

"14 July 1586. Forasmuche as o' Companye do understande th' all such wares as was founde laden aborde o' Barkes in Morlis are arrested and carried awaie by the comaundement of the Governo' of Brittanie and o' men and marriners are come home wee doe thinke it good that some good order be taken amongst us as well for the recovrye thereof, as also for bringinge of the trade to the Isles of Garnsey and Jarsey, and wee doe farther order that a Courte shalbe kept on Tuesdaie next beinge the xixth of this present and that Ires shalbe wretene to the rest of the townes adjoyninge that they sende two of there populace hither to ioyne with us for the furthereunce thereof for that it conserneth them as well as o' selves."
XXIX.

“14 Feb. 1593. At this Courte it is agreed by the whole Companie that o' Governo' Mr. Sampforde shall ride to London and be a suter to the LL of Her Maties Previe Councell either for opening of the trade at Morlais and S. Malloes in Brittanie or else for bringing of the trade to the Isles of Garnsey and Jarsey. And that o' Tresorer Mr. Dorchester shall disburse fiftene poundes to Mr. Governo' oute of the boxe for and towards the charges that shalbe disbursed in and aboute the saide suite. And a v/ he is to redeeme of Mr. Savery of Tottenes in London.”

“And farther it is ordered and enacted by the Governo' Consulls and whole Companie that no person free of this Companie shall from the daie of the keepinge of this presente Courte untill the returne of Mr. Governo' frome London with answere of the foresaid suit goo or sende anie wares or merchandizes to Morlais in Brittanie uppon paine that everye persone offendinge or doinge the contrarye shall forfeite and paie to this Companie ffortie poundes.”

“3 July 1593. It is further agreed that o' Governo' Mr. Sampforde and Willm Martyn the yonger Merchaunte shall ride to London to procure (if it maie be) a ffree trade for St. Malloes in Brittanie and towards the charges thereof Mr. Willm Spicer hath promised to disburse five poundes in money which money o' Tresorer hath promised to repaie the vith of August next. And likewise that Allyn Hackwills x/ shalbe delivered to Willm Martyn towards his charges.”

“19 Sept. 1593. At this Courte ther was an answere of a lre reade which came from the Merchautes of Tottenes concerninge a trade to be brought to Morlais in Brittanie. And that two sufficient personas should be sente to Morlais of purpose before anie trade be brought thither to conferr with the officers there As well for mittigatinge of excessive customes of late raised there As also to have assurance from them for restoringe of suche goodes and merchaundizes as shalbe brought thither: It is therefore concluded and agreed by the Governo', Consulls and whole Companie that no person nor persons free of this

"6 August 1596. Also at this Courte Mr. Governo' moved the Company concerninge a ballott of canvas which was taken as the goodes of one John Tucker and that a delivrance was served fourth of Mr. Mai' Courte by the said Tucker against John Watkins, whereupon the whole Companye did agree that Mr. Governo' and the Consulls for the yeare followinge shall at Mr. Recorders commyne repaire unto him and take his opinion for answeringe the said playnte of delivrance."

"15 Sept. 1596. Whereas at a Courte holden the 9th daie of August last past it was ordeyned that the sute presented by one John Tucker against John Watkins concerninge a ballott of canvas stayed by this Company supposed to be the goodes of William Tucker and that it shouldbe defended by this Company in presentinge the said accon in the Guilhalde of Exon. It was confessed and deposed by the saide Willyam Tucker and one James Bartram and his wief (the Jurie beinge sworne for triall of the same accon) that the said ballott of canvas with two others were bought at St. Malloes in Brittanie and brought home in a Barke called the Unitie of Topsham as his owne proper goodes and to his owne adventure, and that he solde the said three ballettes of canvas to his brother John Tucker for xxxl before it was unladen out of the said Barke whereupon at this present Courte the said three ballettes of canvas were apprised and valewed by the othes of Mr. Willyam Martin, sen., and Illary Calley to the valewe of thirtie poundes. Whereupon the Governo' and Consulls of this Companie with the advise and assistaunce of the Right Wo' Mr. John Chappell, Mai' of the saide Cittie, Mr. John Blackall, Mr. Nicholas Martin, and Mr. William Martin, nowe Alderman of the saide Cittie do sease tax and ympose upon the said Willyam Tucker for his contempte and offence in adventuringe and transportinge the said three ballettes of canvas the some of v/ to be levied upon the goodes and chattels of the saide Willyam Tucker if there be soe much to be founde to satisfie the same within this Cittie of Exon, or in default thereof his bodie to be ymprisoned untill he have satisfied the same. The said some of v/ to be disposed accordinge to the teno', effect, and trewe meaninge of her Maties said graunte made to this Companie."

"3 Feb. 1597. At this Courte it is agreed by the Governo' Consulls and whole Companie that Mr. Governo' shall with all speede conveynient write to London to Mr. Martin Councellor to procure proces against William Tucker for adventuringe into Ffraunce (not beinge free) contrarie to the Charter and that the lawe shalbe followed against him withall expidicon, and that the coste and charges in lawe shalbe borne by this Companie."

"12 April 1597. It was directed that Mr. William Martin Councello' shoulde followe the lawe against William Tucker for and uppon certaine broakes and contemptes offered to this Companie contrary to the tenor and effect of her maties lres patente unto them graunted and that the charges thereof should be disbursed by our Tresoror and whereas uppon the resolucen of her maties Attorney Generall this Companie is advised that the matter is to be followed in the Starr Chamber against the said William Tucker for a contempte in resistinge her maties graunte. In this present Courte it is now fullie concluded that proces shall this terme be served forthe of the said Courte of Starr Chamber and a bill there exhibited for the said contempte against the said William Tucker, and that the same shalbe by the said Mr. Martin prosecuted and that the coste thereof from time to time shalbe disbursed by the said Tresoror for the tyme beinge."

[31st Maie—W. Tucker came in and submitted, and prayed the Company to be good to him. He was fined £10.]

"3 August, 1599. The saide Governo' and assistantes did call before them Alexander Germyn, one of the sureties for William Tucker for payment of v/ pcell of x/ dewe to this Companie the first of August last past, for a broake and other abuses offred to this Companie by the said Tucker as by ane act maie appeare and being demanded whether he woulde paie the v/ or not utterlie denied that he made any absolute promis for payment thereof, but that the promis he made was condicionallie that if the saide Tucker woulde seale him a bande for his discharge and not otherwise contrarie to his promis menceyoned in the said act, and so departed utterlie denieinge the payment thereof wch matter is referred untill the next Courte."

"4 August 1599. The Governo' Consulls and asistauntes at this present Courte did call before them Alexander Germyn and Robarte Parr sureties for William Tucker for payment of xl whereof v/ was dewe the first of August last past and other v/ wilbe due the xxvth of March next for a broake and other abuses offered to this Companie by the said Tucker as by an acte maie appeare, wh after divers and sundrie objections by them alleaged yielded to piae the same according to the said Actes.
